

38-4

LIBRARY

OF THE

Theological Seminary,

PRINCETON, N. J.

BV 4500 .M42 1825

Mead, Matthew, 1630?-1699.

The almost Christian discovered. Or, The false

SELECT
CHRISTIAN AUTHORS, WITH INTRODUCTORY ESSAYS.

William Heath Pinx^t

Eng^d on Steel by J Swain

Then Agrippa said unto Paul,
Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian

ACTS XXVI V 24

THE
ALMOST CHRISTIAN DISCOVERED;

OR, THE
FALSE PROFESSOR TRIED AND CAST.

BY THE
REV. MATTHEW MEAD.

WITH AN INTRODUCTORY ESSAY,

BY THE
REV. DAVID YOUNG,
PERTH.

GLASGOW:

PRINTED FOR CHALMERS AND COLLINS;
WILLIAM WHYTE & CO. AND WILLIAM OLIPHANT, EDINBURGH;
R. M. TIMS, AND WM. CURRY, JUN. & CO. DUBLIN;
AND G. B. WHITTAKER, LONDON.

1825.

INTRODUCTORY ESSAY.

It is a very possible thing for a man to talk about Christian experience, till he has talked himself out of every thing like sober thought, or temperate feeling. Forgetting the weightier bearings of his subject, the severe discipline which it inculcates, and the progressive refinement of the moral principle to which it tends, he may work himself into the delusion that the whole of it is comprised in present sensible enjoyment. In this state of mind, he may find no difficulty in hiding himself under the still grosser delusion, that the revelation of mercy through Jesus Christ, has simply for its object the production of happiness, without any particular concern about the moral condition of its subjects. He may bring himself to applaud Christianity, not because it yields an adequate atonement to the offended Majesty of Heaven, and “crucifies the flesh with the affections and lusts,” but because it furnishes him, or is supposed to furnish him, with the means of immediate gratification. On this topic he may expatiate incessantly, to the neglect of every thing higher or collateral, till it is found that he has nothing to think about, or talk about, or supplicate, or extol in the whole range of Christian exercise, or Christian ordinance, but his successes or reverses in the pursuit of pleasurable emotion. This line of conduct may be marked withal by a penury of thought, an incoherence of mind, a sickening sameness of sound and sentiment, and an imposing whine of ostentatious piety, which make it quite apparent that what he means by pleasurable emotion is not the fruit of that genuine enrichment of intellect, and healthful exhilarations of heart, which comes forth as a consequence from subjection to the gospel, but the shallow illusion of a distempered imagination. All this may prevail and multiply, showing itself in the most disgusting deformity, and meriting the keenest sarcasm with which ungodliness has ever assailed it; but it is no proof whatever, that Christian experience is, in itself, a thing to be despised.

There may be cant associated with any thing which interests the heart of man, from the play-thing of his childhood to the gravest pursuit of his ripened years: and to discard the culture, or the development, or the guardianship of those specific impressions which Christianity engraves on the hearts of its subjects, because they have been leagued with absurdity, or hackneyed in the jargon of fools, would be to adopt a principle which goes to the subversion of all confidence in human affairs—a pretext which would never be thought of but for a deep and deadly dislike to the spirit of Christianity itself. Instead of being an argument for discouraging such impressions, or slighting the means of promoting them, that they are often rendered ridiculous, or carried out into extravagance, it argues the very reverse; for affectation, in all cases, supposes excellence in that on which it fixes; and were there not an intrinsic worth in the experiences of the Christian—were there not an abiding reality in that new order of things, which it establishes within him, the forms of distortion into which they are thrown, or the offensive mimicries which flutter around them, would speedily disappear. It is the existence of the genuine which gives currency to the spurious in any department; and, so far from allowing the latter to generate dislike at the former in the department of Christianity, it is the duty of every man who is the friend of practical piety, to increase his solicitude about it on this very account.

Thus much is required of him, in common justice to the subject itself; and, on this ground alone, he ought to feel himself interdicted from either joining the fellowship, or giving in to the sophistries of those who hold it in derision. Every thing else which is capable of touching the heart of man, is found to yield its experiences. To say nothing of the sciences or arts, or the fascinations of taste, or the varied kinds of innocent recreation, there is not an instance of forbidden indulgence, from the most excusable to the most debasing, but has its chambers of imagery within its votary, and invariably renders him familiar with its own specific sensations; and, surely, it were strange if Christianity, which is fraught with an efficacy so thoroughly influential, were an exception to the general rule. But we have more to do here than to speak of what is due to the claims of the subject. This is a matter of personal interest to every man who prefers alliance with the Christian brotherhood, or hopes to share in their heritage, either present or to come. The possession of Christian principle, deep in its influence, and defined in its operation, is essential to the production, or the keeping alive of a warranted hope of immortality. The man who possesses such an experience, and preserves it in vigour, is refreshed with a well-spring of perennial joy, while the man who possesses it not, must either be the dupe of delusion, or the victim of constant alarm. To be in the former state of mind is to be shielded against all the calamities of the present precarious existence, and prepared to meet them with unshaken fortitude; but, to be in the latter, is to be exposed to all the miseries, and enveloped in all the gloom of infatuation or suspense. But to sustain the ascendancy of Christian principle, to cherish its influence, and give way to its control, however desirable a thing in itself, or however well entitled to eager and continued exertion, is found to be very difficult by all who make the attempt. Christianity in hearts like ours, is not a plant of native growth. In its grand essential principles it is an exotic, transferred from a region of kindness to one that is bleak and sterile, where the soil in which it is inserted, and the moral atmosphere which hovers over it, are alike at variance with its well-being. True, indeed, there is this peculiarity about it, that whenever it takes root it remains, and can never altogether lose its vitality, but holds on its way, and rises to maturity in defiance of all resistance. The cause of this, however, is not in the soil; for so much has it been loosened and deadened by the wintry influence of ungodliness, that its tendency is not to cherish, but to heave out the seed of the word, as a thing uncongenial to its nature. Nor is it in Christianity itself as a thing absolutely indestructible, but imparted by the sovereign will of him from whom it comes, and who has chosen to give it perpetuity by the special forthgoings of his quickening spirit. But, while it is true that Christianity abides with the man to whom it comes, it is equally true, that it often abides with him in much weakness, and, instead of giving forth the decided indications of its residence, it is put under a depression which renders it next to impossible to distinguish between the genuine Christian, and the nominal professor. The fascinations of pleasure, the power of local prejudice, the example of temporizing professors, the gale of this world's prosperity, or the storm of its adversity, all superintended, and kept in motion by the agency of fallen spirits, are a few of the adverse elements which contribute to this effect. But to specify them in full enumeration, is beyond the power of man, for they are manifold as the creations of the human fancy, assuming different aspects, and forming themselves into different modifications in the case of every individual, and under every new arrangement of circumstances in which that individual is placed. So perilous is the lot of the Christian, and so artful, assiduous, and multiform, is the resistance which assails him, in the present penury of his resources and distance from his home.

But that which arms the adversary with almost all his power, is the state of the Christian's heart. When the field of the husbandman is rich and fertile, cultivated to his mind, and suited to the nature of the seed which he casts into it, he has reason to hope that, though assailed by a considerable inclemency of season, his crop may hold on to an average harvest. But if the soil be such as to conspire with such untowardness, instead of counteracting it, he relinquishes all hope, and awaits a harvest of sorrow, in the place of joy and gladness. The analogy holds, nay, increases in force, in application to the case before us. The moral elements around the Christian may be what they will, in point of power or tendency, to wither his graces; but they are nothing to him as instruments of injury, till they come into alliance with the affections of his heart. No man is the worse for being simply exposed to temptation, nor could such an exposure involve him in the slightest moral injury, were every thing trustworthy in the citadel within him; for it is not in his power to commit sin, except in as far as he is snared into the love of sin. The heart is the man, for all moral purposes; and good or evil he cannot be till he has made choice of the one or the other, as that which his heart desires. It is a matter of course, then, that, were there a principle of thorough-going resistance within the man, the temptations which assail him from without would be reduced to absolute impotency. They might annoy him, perhaps, by their unsightly forms, or make him shrink within himself with horror at their atrocities, or induce him to regret that his dwelling is so near to the tabernacles of sin; but their direct transitive malignity would be completely neutralized.

Is it so, however, that this is a mere speculation, totally out of keeping with existing facts? Is the spirit of temptation most potent and effective, as well as subtle, and active, and prevalent, among the children of our people? Do we see the trophies of its victories rising up around us in frequent, and dismal, and ominous succession, and find it feasting itself even to riot on the spoils of virtue and godliness? Has it invaded even the righteous, in every corner of the land, to the wounding of their spirits, the blighting of their goodness, and the desecration of their holy profession, while it holds the mastery undisputed over the children of this world? That such is the manner of its working, and the mighty extent of its devastations, is too notorious to admit of denial by any man who knows himself, or is acquainted with living society. But if so, how powerful an illustration is thus given of the evil bias of the human heart! We fall, not because we are tempted, but because of a most inveterate affinity between the spirit of the temptation and our own prevailing propensities; and if this be the root of the evil, what emphasis does it give to the inspired injunction, “Keep thy heart above all keeping; for out of it are the issues of life!”

It was said above, that by compliance with temptation, a man's Christianity may be so depressed as to render it impossible for mortals, at least, to trace the distinction between him and the nominal professor. Nor, we are afraid, is it any breach of charity to suppose, that such a state of things is often to be met with even among good men. But this surely is a tremendous visitation to an heir of immortality. It is equal to an extinction, for the time being, of all his hopes. Our faith in any thing is sustained by evidence, as well as produced by evidence, and if the evidence of our Christianity has been suffered to disappear, our hope of immortality must perish along with it. A Christian in such circumstances may cling to his reminiscences, in default of his present consciousness, he may try to bring back to his relief the emotions or contemplations, or transports, which once gladdened him for a little, and then passed away: but to confide in these, amidst present deficiencies, is at best precarious, and to apply them as an opiate to present fears or convictions, is dangerous in the extreme. When a man has lost the tone of mind which the Scriptures designate spiritual, by falling back under the ascendancy of secular affections, and when such a state of things continues, to the rapid deterioration of his internal character, there is no remembrance of better days, however vivid or fondly cherished, which can yield him a warranted satisfaction. A present propensity to evil, indulged, obeyed, and gratified, till it has produced a broad and palpable, although, perhaps, a disguised conformity to this world, is as forcible a testimony to ungodliness, as its opposite can be to saintship. We may view them, at least in practice, as quite in parity; but in the case before us, the latter has this disadvantage, that it has passed away, and is available only as a matter of recollection, while the former is presently felt as a matter of undoubted consciousness. We are aware, that however far a genuine Christian may depart from his God, there will be a portion of spirituality working within him, and that if this could be felt by him even in his deepest depravities, it might, at least, modify, if not neutralize the other indications, however dark or ominous they may have become. But we are speaking at present of cases in which, happily for him, it cannot be felt, but is altogether hid from his view; and in such cases we maintain, that existing facts, and these alone, ought to influence his belief and practice; for whatever the reality may be as to his state before God, that reality is placed, for the time, by his own misdoings, under a moral concealment. He cannot see it by intuition as a pure abstraction, for this is the province of his God, which it would be impious to invade, although an invasion of it were practicable. To him it is never illumined, and never visible, except in the light of moral evidence opening from his heart, and displaying itself in his conduct; and be what he may, in point of fact, whenever this evidence is lost, the continuity of his spiritual being as a matter of consciousness to himself is broken up, he is thrust back on the incipency of the subject, and it is neither Scriptural, nor reasonable, nor desirable, to expect, that he can ever “come to himself,” except by an immediate and wakeful return to those specific Christian exercises which, at first, made him to differ, and which God has ordained for his relief. While it is true, therefore, that when a man is born of God, his seed remaineth in him, and can neither be eradicated nor made to die by any possible disaster, it is still to be remembered that we are evinced, and only evinced to be the subjects of this seed, “if we hold fast the confidence and the rejoicing of the hope firm unto the end.” The doctrine of perseverance is at once a practical and comfortable doctrine, but the man who can recur to it as a palliative for irreligion, averts it from its practical tendency, and turns it into a minister of sin—a perversion so impious and so fearfully injurious, that the slightest approximation to it in any one instance ought to produce alarm.

Is it so then that a Christian may approach so nearly to a level with the more reputable of the unconverted, as to obliterate from his view the line of demarcation between his character and theirs, and to merge him over again so far as he can see in the general mass of unsanctified human nature? May a calamity so awful commence its inroads so easily, and steal in upon his mind by a process so slow and imperceptible, as to accomplish its purpose ere ever he is aware? Are its tendencies so disastrous as to provoke his God, to obstruct his usefulness, and to toss him back upon the ocean of uncertainty, after he was approaching the haven of repose, while multitudes, it may be, by his pestilent example, are lulled into a stupor which shall only end in eternal wo? Is the placidity of our times withal so favourable to its encroachments, while the general spirit of Christians among us is so sickly and listless, and prone to temporize, as to constrain the apprehension that its deadening influence is abroad in the Church?— Then surely it becomes us all to take this matter seriously to heart, to rise above the common-places of our dull and monotonous piety, to resist the insidious approach of that bondage, which, although so silken in its touch, and so easily worn, is yet so fatal in its results, and to stand off from the world, that we may exult in the liberty, and put forth the nerve of Zion's free-born men.

To this altitude, however, we cannot rise, except on the energies of our religion, and our religion itself can neither give us propensity to rise, nor power to disengage ourselves, nor fortitude to make the attempt, except in so far as it is within us as a matter of experience, imbibed in its spirit, felt in its efficacy, digested in its heavenly nourishment, and obeyed in its paramount authority. We speak not of experience, as a quiescent mood of mind, nor as a business of monastic retirement, consisting in visions and contemplations, which sicken the brain, and paralyze the faculties, and either vanish in silence, or are expended in social colloquy, but we speak of it as that inward concoction of Christian principle into Christian feeling, which imbues and invigorates the soul, supplying it at once with power and propensity for discharging the duties of the Christian life. We speak of it, in short, as a clear conception of Christian principle, seen in its own light, and resting on its own foundation, derived in its purity from the word of God, freed from secular alliance, and secular commixture, and telling upon the soul, in its every faculty, to the decided formation of the Christian man. This is what we want, and it must be honestly affirmed in the face of all our bluster, and all our boasted munificence, and all our increasing tendency to social good nature, that nothing short of this in large and speedy accession, can bring back the characters of the present race of professing men to a conformity with their pretensions. We are gliding on right pleasantly, with many an attractive in the scenery around us which former and hardier voyagers were not allowed to see, but the question is, are we keeping our course? Are we merely out on an excursion of pleasure, or are we steering direct to the distant haven, which our profession says we desire to see?

If there be really cause for this inquiry, and if a deeper feeling of the power of our religion be the only thing which can enable us to meet it with a satisfactory reply, it is natural to ask what is to be done? The fountain of our resources is with our God, but the means of drawing from that fountain are with us, and as he has sanctioned the means as well as opened the fountain, it would be impious to expect supply in any other way, than by an industrious Christian use of these means. Ignorance of what they are, however, or of the necessity of using them, is not the prevailing cause of the existing malady. There is an orthodox admission of the truth on these points, which requires little rectification in respect of doctrine: but the orthodoxy, however correct in speculation, is dry, and negative, and inefficient, in point of practice, and we know of nothing which is better fitted to disturb its neutrality, and arouse it into life and action throughout the whole circle of Christian duty, than the awakening of a spirit of jealousy among professors of religion—a jealousy, however, not of that selfish kind, which renders Christians suspicious of each other, as if they were rival candidates for a solitary prize, which if gained by one must be lost to all besides—nor of that censorious kind in which a man is so occupied in the detection, and exposure, and reprehension of other men's delinquencies as to have little time, and less desire to think about his own—nor of that distrustful kind in which a man enervates his soul by looking on the promises of grace, and the predictions of glory only as a cluster of interesting probabilities, which may be verified, or may not, but present not that solidity to his view, nor abiding claim upon his heart, which can arrest his thoughts, or call forth his religious aspirings—nor of that desponding kind in which a man distresses his soul by brooding incessantly over the contrast between the sublime of Christian requirement, and the deplorable depth of human impotency, forgetting in the fever of his musings, that the supplies of our religion are as abundant as its demands are broad and inflexible, and fretting himself even to despair, under the very meridian of encouragement and hope. In such jealousies as these there is no Christianity, and by either or all of them, a man may be actuated till they have consumed him, without gaining any thing but misery to himself, and the cordial avoidance of all who know him.

But what we would recommend is the jealousy which the men of the world exemplify, when they feel themselves embarked on an enterprize which is momentous in its results, critical in its managements, and subject to many casualties in its progress to maturity. In such cases, their very souls are identified with their purpose. They are all scrutiny, and circumspection, allowing no incident to disconcert them, nor any crisis to escape them, till the desire of their hearts is accomplished, or if in any of them it be otherwise, his discomfiture is predicted, and it usually comes to pass. They are "wise after their generation." They act like men, were their aim but manly, and in the tact of their operations, the man of religious profession may see a similitude of what he ought to be. Is he not embarked on an enterprize of the highest possible moment for time, and for all futurity? Is not the very possibility of frustration enough to cover him with dismay? Has he not to work out his salvation amidst obstructions and counteractions the most subtle and insidious? He has, and yet the want of this spirit-stirring element whatsoever be its name, which is so potent and so well applied among sublunary men, is paralyzing his efforts in thousands of instances, and spreading a shadow of death over all his movements. He is at his ease, he doubts not but the current of events in the Christian community, in which he takes so little interest, is carrying him securely on to the land of uprightness, although, perhaps, there is no one thing which Christianity has achieved for him, of which he has any definite view, as a warrant for this expectation.

Now it is this ease of mind of which we wish to see him bereft, not because we envy his enjoyment, but because we dread his infatuation; and in order to this it shall be our endeavour to provoke him to jealousy in the sense above described, in the few remaining pages of this Essay. Let it not be thought however, that the thing can be done merely by an argument made out to the conscience, and for the time admitted to be fair or forcible. This, at best, is but conviction, and if the whole shall terminate here, the man is injured instead of being reformed, because, if, after feeling the force of argument, he has failed to give way to its moral impulse, he has sinned against light, which is the most heinous, and, therefore, the most hazardous of all the forms of human trespass. After gaining access to the soul, the argument must abide with it in order to serve its purpose, subduing resistance, extending and deepening its hold of the conscience, and guiding the man to such a course of conduct as corresponds with its conclusions; and the man who is in earnest about such a consummation, will ever be careful that his convictions as they come, shall form themselves into aspirations for that influence from above, without which, in all its speciality, and in all its power, our clearest convictions and warmest desires are but as the morning cloud, or the early dew, which goeth away.

When the truest friends of piety among us, who know the Christian world, and have carefully observed its present symptoms, are overheard in their prayers, on its behalf, the things which they uniformly implore are a check to the prevalence of a worldly disposition, an antidote to the influence of unwarrantable expectations, and a permanent excitement to individual Christian activity. Now the exercise of jealousy is not the check nor the antidote nor the excitement referred to, but if thoroughly awakened, we are persuaded it is the very instrument by which the Spirit of God would realize them all.

It would check the prevalence of a worldly disposition. The Spirit of this world, in the modification of it at present referred to, is not the Spirit of wickedness strictly so called. It is not that propensity to open impiety, or villany, or sensuality, which the mere civilian combines with the Christian in consigning to reprobation—but it is that inspiration from the world, in its wealth, or its business, or its moderated enjoyments, or its ties of relationship, which the civilian tolerates, and which Christianity stands alone in forbidding to her disciples. It is not, in short, the practice of obvious iniquity, but the pursuit of what is lawful—the doing of that which is not a sin, from a spirit which is unlawful, which is at present so adverse to the wellbeing of professing Christians. Instances of the grosser kind may occur even among the best of Christians, as noxious humours may be generated, and become eruptive, in the healthiest constitutions, but in the very worst of times they are of rare occurrence. They cannot be habitual in any follower of Jesus Christ; for a wicked Christian, a habitually unholy saint, a uniformly scandalous worshipper of God, are collocations of thought to which our language is not familiar; the very sound of such a phraseology grates upon the ear; it is an absurdity in logic, and an impossibility in fact. From what may be called enormities of guilt, therefore, Christians in the mass are comparatively in little hazard. But there is a spirit which steals in upon the man under the goodly exterior of diligence in business, or concern for the support of a rising family, or a permissible aversion to manual labour, or a creditable desire to be rich or great, and just because these things are not only harmless, but confessedly laudable; because the spirit which works in them arrives at the heart, under this auspicious recommendation, do they succeed in secularizing the man within the very precincts of warranted indulgence. We can never be too deeply convinced of it that if we are at all sanctified men, if we are so much as in good earnest about religion, it is not "the works of the flesh," in their own unvailed deformity, but the spirit which animates these works departing from them, but actuating us through a less offensive medium, which is most likely to entangle our souls, and snare them into sin, so long as we have to do with the affairs of this life. "The course of this world," in the grosser sense of the words, is an obvious course, which is easily seen, and must be abandoned, by all who so much as pretend to godliness, but to take part in the necessary business of the world, to share in its useful enjoyments, to evade its noxious influence, and turn its good things to a Christian account, constitutes the great difficulty, and it is this region of subtile infection, so sickly, and yet so much frequented, where the malady is endemic, and the number of spiritual invalids so wofully multiplied.

But why are they multiplied? Are the propensities of the spiritual man so different from those of the natural, that sickness is his element, and health the object of his aversion? Or is his destiny so peculiar, as to entail upon him the former, and exclude him from the latter, by a necessary law of his being? By no means. Disease is grievous to the child of grace as really as to the child of nature. He avoids it, and seeks its opposite, under the impulse of a feeling which is steady and uniform as the workings of instinct. Its encroachments afflict him, and drink up his spirits, with a fierceness and acrimony, which are so much the more intolerable that their seat is in the soul, and not in the body. Nor is the prevalence of the evil at all to be ascribed to any destination on the part of his God, inspiring him with spiritual life, but, at the same time, oppressing the functions and withholding the joys of that life; for in the economy under which he lives, there is a provision made for him, which is richer in its stores, and stronger in its securities, and healthier in its tendencies, and more minute in its adaptations, than the system of nature herself. Under the one economy, disaster may come, and the creature may perish, in despite of all the wisdom and all the care which it is possible for him to put forth; but under the latter, he can never perish, nor can he ever suffer distress, unless he has procured it by his own misdoings. But when he enters this infected region, he forgets himself; the influence of its atmosphere stupefies his senses; a moral lethargy pervades his soul; and or ever he is aware, the principle of self-preservation within him—a principle which is as much identified with the spiritual as with the natural life—has sunk into dormancy. He may be quiet, or unconscious of pain, or pleased with his situation, and impatient of all remarks upon it; but is he the better for this? He is verily the worse for it. It is the most appalling symptom of the whole case. We pity our friend in his bodily malady, although he enjoys the use of his faculties, and is fully aware of his situation: but if the malady shall go on till it has disturbed his faculties; if the dejection of countenance, which befits its character, has been changed into an unseemly liveliness, while the images of health are sporting with his fancy, and the language of incoherence dropping from his lips,—it is then that we tremble for the consequences. It is the delirium of the malady, or the greatness of its power, as indicated by that delirium, which distresses us most of all; and were the symptoms of the spiritual malady as correctly estimated, or were the springs of spiritual sympathy as easily opened as those of mere humanity, it would then be felt that the contentment or cheerfulness of that Christian, who has caught the contagion of a worldly spirit, and is labouring under its delirium, is the very reason why all that is tender, and all that is sacred in the friendship of Christian brotherhood, should be excited on his behalf.

What then is to be done for him, or rather what is he to do for himself? for here, as in other matters, he must "work out his own salvation," it being "God who worketh in him both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Why, he must be put in fear. That modification of jealousy, which springs from a sense of danger, must be awakened in his soul. In a moral sense, the man is insane—his heart is ensnared, and his head is turned; his repugnance to the imputation is but a symptom of its truth, and that distempered ease of mind, which has been thus superinduced upon him, is the very first thing which must be assailed. He must work out his salvation from this calamity, but he will not work, he cannot do so: to suppose that he could, till he is first actuated by fear and trembling, would be to violate all philosophy, and all experience, and all inspired delineation which apply to the case. He must think otherwise before he can act otherwise; he must see danger before he can flee from danger; he must feel it as a matter of pungent conviction, that he is "conformed to this world" before he can submit to be "transformed by the renewing of his mind." Were the danger in question but local and physical, confined to the body, and advancing upon it from without, he might be shielded against it, or carried away from it irrespective of the state of his mind, or kept in perfect safety by the vigilance of his friends, and, judging from practical indications, we are obliged to suspect that something akin to this is most impiously expected, even in cases of spiritual danger, by secularized professors of Christianity.

The readiness with which they descend into moral contamination, and the complacency with which they remain there, seem to bespeak a latent belief that God will preserve them, and bring them up again, whether they will or not. But, this is grossly to materialize, and grievously to pervert the whole system of spiritual discipline. In some such way as this the Creator may act on the trees of the forest, or the beasts of the field, or the faculties of wicked men. He can make a man the instrument of his will, although that "man meaneth not, so neither doth his heart think so," and there are, confessedly, many things contributive to the preservation and ultimate maturity of a renovated man, of which that man has no knowledge, and to which he gives no conscious concurrence. This, however, is not the way in which he is either renewed at first, or educated afterwards. Although much may be done for creatures like us, among the good things of this life, while our hearts are at war with the doer, yet nothing can be done in the application of salvation to our souls either at first, or in its subsequent stages, except in the way of bringing our souls to acquiesce in the will of our great Benefactor. It is souls which are lost, it is the rescue of souls "from Satan to God," in the exercise of thought, volition and love, which redemption contemplates, and to suppose that the work of salvation can be carried through, although disowned or counterwrought by the very soul which is the subject of it, is to harbour the wildest extravagance.

No, ye degenerate Christians, who have come down from the pinnacle of ethereal inhalations, to stupify your senses by breathing a corrupted atmosphere, and are projecting in your folly a forbidden alliance between the services of God and Mammon, ye can never succeed. Your faculties cannot be stretched between extremes so distant. You have a moral nature, and therefore you must serve some one. You have each but one soul, and therefore can serve but one master. Bethink yourselves then. You are sunk at present, into a deep abyss of infatuation and infamy, your leanness is testifying against you, heaven is frowning upon you in righteous displeasure, your spiritual kindred on earth are saddened at the sight of you, and hell herself, although pleased with your devisings, has penetration enough to hold you in derision. You are beset with dangers which would alarm an angel, could he be placed in your circumstances, and do not suppose that your escape can be effected without any concern on your part. You cannot be shielded, in your present predicament, nor drawn out of it against your will. Your Christian friends are not equal to this, the prayers of all the saints cannot avail you, nor can God himself, although rich in grace, and abounding in compassion to them that fear him, come down for your deliverance in any other way than by changing the current of your propensities, and making you workers together with himself. Your slumberings must be broken, to dissipate your reveries, your eyes must be opened to gaze on realities, and your consciences must be smitten, and constrained to speak out, before you can so much as bestir yourselves in spiritual reformation. You cannot be caught away from the scene of secular indulgence by any effort of any power which acts merely upon you, but does not act within you; you must come out of it by a movement which is your own, and commenced under the impulse of choice and conviction. Remember too, that this is the gospel of the case as well as the law of it. It invests you unduly with no power, while it urges you imperiously to duty; it ascribes to you no merit, while it loads you with responsibility; it gives countenance to no infraction on the entireness of the grace of God as the spring of every thing gracious in human operation, but it teaches you what in practice is greatly overlooked,—that it is not upon you by coercion or detached effective force, but within you by persuasion and cogent moral influence, that grace abounds to the accomplishment of its purpose. “It is God who worketh in you,” first “to will,” and then “to do of his good pleasure;” and if so, then has he chosen by his Spirit to coalesce with your spirits, that, by putting yourselves in motion, according to the rule of prescribed activity, you may regain the ascendancy over all terrestrial entanglements. Still the work is yours, as a matter of indefeasible obligation, and if it is not done, the law of spiritual obedience is not kept, and the fruits of spiritual obedience cannot become apparent; for the Spirit of holiness, although the fountain of all that you are, as “created anew in Christ Jesus,” has not made himself a subject of law for you. He has not become your substitute for pollution, as Christ was for guilt and condemnation; and to give tolerance within you to any such delusion, is to abuse the grace of God, and to “nullify the law through faith.”

We speak not here of infants or imbeciles, or persons who are physically incapable of estimating the power of motives; for, as these are deprived of your privilege, they are also relieved from your obligations. God has denied us access to their understandings; and, leaving us nothing to do for them, he has hid from us the way in which they are made to share in the visitations of his mercy. But we speak of you, who are not in their circumstances, who have no claims whatever to be included in their exemptions: and, in recurring to the assertion that you must come out of your present predicament, we implore you to take up the case, and ask yourselves how you are to do so. Can the transition be effected as a matter of course at any time you may choose to think of it? Surely, you are aware, that this is not its character—that there are habits to be subdued, and aversions to be surmounted, and propensities to be mortified, and alliances to be broken off—a formidable muster of obstruction and difficulty, for the mastering of which, indifference is but another name for imbecility. Your disease is numbness, occasioned by the action on your souls of those frosts in the moral world, into the region of which you ought not to have entered, and nothing can relieve you but a new impulse of heavenly vitality coming forth from the heart in re-action on its invader, and diffusing itself in warming and restorative influence over the whole soul. But, be assured of it, that this process, in the spiritual as in the animal system, is searching and painful. It resembles not an awakening from sleep, but a rising from the dead. It is not a coalition, but a conflict between life and death, the one struggling to regain its own, and the other to retain its encroachment. You may have slept into the disease, but sleep out of it you never can: and harbour not the thought, nor the delusion which lurks under it, that you are Christians, and cannot die; for it is not the fact which is secret, but the symptoms, which are obvious, with which you have at present to do. It is the things which are revealed in the development of our own characters, as well as in the oracles of heaven, which belong unto us; and, mention it, if you can, what is it among all the appearances of your case, which prevents the wo with which Israel's prophet was burdened of old from alighting upon you in all its tremendous severity?—"Go, and tell this people, Hear ye indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not. Make the heart of this people fat, and make their ears heavy, and shut their eyes, lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed—until the cities be wasted, without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate, and the Lord have removed men far away, and there be a great forsaking in the midst of the land."

Again, jealousy would furnish an antidote to the influence of unwarrantable expectations. The disposition to keep up the heart amidst obvious signs of declension in the Christian life, by reverting to the experience of better days as evidence of conversion, and drawing from this evidence an argument for safety founded on the doctrine of Christian perseverance, although in very injurious operation, is, perhaps, not so common in our times as a proneness to hope the best, without any evidence at all, or any assignable cause for that uniform composure in which the multitude are carried along to the crisis of their destiny. The vast majority, it is to be feared, have not got so far as to reason the point, at least, in a positive way. The whole subject, as it floats before their minds, is loose and confused—there is nothing definite or tangible, about it, but still there is a hope on which the soul reposes itself amidst all the vicissitudes of time, and its concerns, and which they cannot bear to be persuaded either to examine or to dislodge. Or, if they come to specification at all, as perhaps they must at times in the privacy of their thoughts, the case which they make out for themselves, and on which they rest their expectations is altogether of a negative kind. “I am not a Heathen, but a Christian,” may be supposed to be the plea in such cases, “and a Christian too, not of the Greek or Roman school, but of the British and Protestant, where the streams of salubrity which emanate from the Bible are purest, because nearest the fountain. Among Protestants, I am not an infidel. The scorn which sceptical impiety has cast upon religion, and the arts by which subtle ungodliness would undermine its principles are abhorrent to my soul, and neither enjoy my countenance, nor receive my co-operation. I venerate the institutes of my religion, I concur in its sacred services, and disown the practice of public indecency in compliance with its prohibitions; and, although the business of this life, and its allowable recreations, and the aspirings of a spirit of enterprize should engross my thoughts, or carry me into occasional excesses, yet these are reprov'd by my better feelings, if not outweighed by my Christian virtues, and why should I doubt but that all is well? The very state of things around me is nourishment to my hope. God has ordain'd salvation for man, and furnish'd its great pre-requisites in the mission and death of his Son, he has caus'd the tidings of this salvation to come down, and the light of it to brighten for ages on the land of my nativity. My parents were Christians, and gave me to their God in the days of my earliest infancy, and although I may have been chargeable, on some occasions, with slips and delinquencies just like other people, yet my conscience acquits me of every thing which can fairly be construed into a decided abandonment of the God of my fathers. I am a Christian, in short, if I be any thing, and, although not initiated into those mystified spiritualities, which others value so much, and which, if there be any thing in them, seem to belong to heaven rather than to the business of earth, the conclusion is warrant'd, and does honour to the mercy of God, that I am a sharer in the common benefit."

Now, leaving the merits of this claim in the fullness of its amount, to be estimated by the Author of the following Volume, let us put the question here, What, if it be all a delusion? We shall not say it is so, although the ignorance which it betrays, even of the dialect of scriptural feeling, goes far to destroy its pretensions; but it may be so: it is, at least, but the showing of an erring mortal in his own cause, and on a subject in which the wisest are often bewildered. To examine it anew is a dictate of every day wisdom, for men do not rest in their calculations of money, or merchandize, or science, till they have subjected them to a repeated inspection, although the results of error in these departments, at the very highest, are but trifles light as air when compared with the interest which is here at stake. Nor is it possible, that a review of the case, if conducted in a proper spirit, can fail to be profitable, whatsoever be the result to which it conducts you. Let it be supposed, that such a review confirms the belief that you are, in fact, what you hope you are, that it has given clearance and consolidation to the grounds of your previous opinion, or has augmented these by the discovery of some latent lineaments of the Christian character which really belong to you, but have hitherto escaped your notice, and this is profitable in as much as you thus procure for yourselves a warranted accession of establishment and joy. Or, suppose the reverse of this to be the conclusion at which you arrive, that in the very act of examining the position on which you stand, you find it to give way from under you, and your hope to vanish like the imagery of a dream, and still you are gainers by the result. You may fall from the eminence on which your fancy had placed you, but you are just where you were in the sight of God, and you cannot fall as yet into actual perdition. You may be hurled downwards to your proper standing among the children of this world, but the children of this world, and yourselves among them, are "prisoners of hope," in a region where mercy is proclaimed, and where the God who made you, is ready to redeem you. The disclosure then, although awful in its character, is yet of immense importance: it is not to be deprecated, but made welcome in all the solemnity of its indications; for had the delusion continued, your ruin was certain, but now it is gone, and the way of escape is open before you. Besides all this, aversion to scrutiny in so weighty a matter, would betray an indifference, which but ill comports with pretensions to Christianity, as well as induce a suspicion, that you secretly shrink from the consequences in which it is likely to end. The man who cherishes such an aversion must either be reckless of the whole matter, or afraid to set his own eyes on that which embodies his hopes for eternity. In either case, it is time to be suspicious, and to begin the search for realities.

We do not ask every man to agitate the question, Am I a Christian or am I not? for many, it is presumable, have established the point on the surest of evidence, and having no need to "lay again the foundation of repentance from dead works and of faith towards God," they are not called upon to embarrass their exercise, or becloud their prospects, by attempting anew to clear out that foundation. Nor do we ask any man to make the ascertainment of this point the object of his exclusive and feverish pursuit, for, if he does so, if he turns his attention inward upon himself, and chains it down to the solitary function of watching and estimating the movements of his own heart, or developments of his own character, the commanded use of the Christian remedy being all the while suspended, it is beyond a question, that he will fret his own spirit, and multiply the perplexities which he wishes to clear away. If the case be inexplicable as it stands, it must be made to stand otherwise. 'The man must come out from himself, and go into the region of promise, and privilege, and definite prescription, which God has unfolded before him in the word of the truth of the gospel; and having refreshed itself there, his mind will acquire a new vigour, and be furnished with new material for coming to know "how that Jesus Christ is in him;" except as yet, he be unaided. But we urge it on you to agitate the question, because your claim to the attainment of the former of these classes, is very suspicious, while the fears which afflict the latter, are far away from you. Take care, however, how you manage the scrutiny, for on this, depends every thing for its practical advantage. If you content yourselves with surveying precisely the same features in your moral complexion, and with looking at these features at every repeated survey, in precisely the same point of view; it is a matter of course, that you can make no discoveries; and however often you repeat the exercise, the last result will correspond with the first. Or although, after the manner of experienced calculators, you vary the process, and make your characters to appear before you in many a different attitude; yet if you examine them in an easy, and reposing, and hoping state of mind, you have the best reason to suspect that the decision to which you are brought, will be less in accordance with the evidence of facts, than with the frame of spirit, in which you examined these facts; and, after all, your confidence is founded not on the intrinsic merits of the case, but on the fondness of a fallacious wish in reference to that case. Hope is the soul of terrestrial enjoyment, but it is the opiate of fear, and where fear is asleep, there can be no impartiality, and of course, no success in the examination of religious character. It would be absolutely senseless in any man to go into scrutiny, on any subject in the absence of all apprehension. It is a thing which he cannot do, the very laws of his constitution have put it out of his power, and if respect for authority, in any instance, induces him to attempt it, he is constrained to recur to an ideal apprehension, as a substitute for belief in the reality of its existence. But where the apprehension is ideal, such also must be the scrutiny to which it gives rise; where there is no solid suspicion of danger or disappointment, there can be no earnestness of effort to avoid these evils.

Now, all this enforces the thought, that, in order to a proper estimate of the foundation on which your hopes are at this moment resting for eternity, you must be actuated by the spirit of jealousy. Nothing can avail you but that upstirring of spirit which brings you in good earnest to have to do with realities. The view which you are called upon to take of yourselves is not imaginary, but sober and rational. It does not consist in censuring yourselves without cause, or in thinking yourselves more sinful, or vile, or ill-deserving, than you really are; for this would be meanness, and not modesty: but it is the produce of sound knowledge, applied to pious purposes. Fear it not, that your religious monitors would have you to feel what you do not believe about yourselves, any more than about other men; for you must have evidence here on which to ground your sentiment, as well as in every thing else. Their aim is to persuade you to search for facts, that you may know them, and be disciplined by them, and that, under the impression of all that is dismal in your present disease, you may come to the experience of all that is healing in its proffered remedy. Well, a pious suspicion of yourselves is just the instrument by which this knowledge is acquired. That vulgar jealousy which is so offensively prevalent in common life, is proverbially quicksighted in finding out the faults of its object. So eagerly does it search for deficiencies, that the mind which it actuates is sure to imagine blemishes which never had any existence, and are only attached to the character which it persecutes, by the taint of its own malevolence. This, you will say, is absolute vice. And so it is; but it is nothing more than a human faculty—a constitutional instrument of virtue—first vitiated, and then misapplied. But let this same faculty be recalled from what is alien and outward, and made to settle on what is within; let it be divested of its moral turpitude, and imbued with Christian feeling; and then will it be found to be the very instrument by which the Almighty is pleased to work, when he rends the veil of delusion, and lays a man open to himself, teaching him first to know, and then to abhor himself, repenting in dust and ashes. It may be severe in its reprehensions, or vexatious in descrying deformities; but it is the ally of truth, and the pioneer of holiness.

Where the Christian neglects it, he cannot see himself; where he does not see himself, he cannot be humble; and where he is not humble, he cannot prosper.

Again, Jealousy gives a permanent excitement to individual Christian activity. However far the real Christian may have gone into apostacy, or to whatever extent the lethargy of his disease may have overpowered his sensibilities, he is not absolutely dead; and the Spirit of life being still within him, it is to be expected, that occasional twitches of conviction will shoot across his soul, giving him a momentary impulse, and startling him for the time being with a passing glimpse of his situation. But where these awakenings, however pungent, are of rare occurrence, and short continuance; where they die away from his recollection, like the imagery of a frightful dream, without altering the mood of his mind, or giving any efficient stimulus to its powers of action; they are not to be counted on, and argue nothing but increasing obduracy. The instances in which they occur, are numerous; for man is not bad enough, even in his degeneracy, to be always indifferent to the smitings of his conscience: but there is no instance in which a fitfulness of this kind is productive of that repentance and amendment of life, which brings the Christian back from his wanderings, or the sinner to accept of the proffered salvation. In order to this, the excitement must not be transient and intermitting, but steady and enduring; not simply disturbing the sleep of insensibility, but counteracting its tendencies, and putting it altogether away. The thing wanted to arouse the man, and make him aspire and act, as well as think and feel, is not a gust of painful feeling, but the power of abiding principle, commanding the soul, and constraining the exertion of its energies, in obedience to its steady dictation. Nothing short of this can be of solid use, for giving tension and vigour to the nerve of Christian industry, after that nerve has been relaxed and enfeebled by the slumbers of insensibility. The soul must be made industrious, as well as awaked out of sleep; but nothing can make it so, but living and practical principle, and principle, too, of that very kind, whether painful or pleasurable, terrific or attractive, which is fitted to give impulse, and to sustain activity, in the direction of present duty.

Now, simple alarm is not fitted for this. By the grace of God, it may have power enough to impel the sinner, or the degenerate Christian, to flee for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before him; but, having brought him to this, it has expended itself, and leaves him in peace and comfort. Or, if it fails to carry him to the source of relief, although still retaining the ascendancy within him, it oppresses his faculties, and sinks him into helpless despondency. But jealousy is a thorough-going principle, adapted to the sinner in the first awakenings of his religious concern, and abiding with him as his guide and monitor, throughout the journey of his earthly pilgrimage. Nor can he ever be safe in the absence of its guardianship, till he has arrived in the land of uprightness. When asleep, it awakes him; when perplexed, it constrains him to search for relief; and, even when his prospects are bright and transporting, solacing his soul, and stretching it out by anticipation on the glories of immortality, it reminds him that he has to run, in order to obtain; that in proportion to the richness of the prize, should be the fear of coming short of it; and in this way does it form him to industry, and give a decidedly practical bearing to the sweetest and most sublime of his contemplations. True enough, it will prove itself, in less or more, a ministration of fear; for it belongs to its very nature, to preserve before the soul a regular muster of all the facts and probabilities which are, or may be, opposed to its well-being; but this is the very germ of its utility; for its proper business is to speak truth;—and if there be but one truth which ought to be feared in the whole history of a Christian's heart, or life, or prospects, that is the truth to which his meditations ought to be steadily turned. In the whole business of religion, we must either be driven by fear, or drawn by love, or actuated by both combined; and by nothing whatever ought the influence of the former to be neutralized, but by the ascendancy of the latter. The heaven which the Scriptures exhibit to the Christian, is indeed a powerful attraction; and the sanctioned hope of arriving in it, is the kindest impulse to duty; but how arduous is the transformation under which a man must pass, before he can possibly enter it! how wayward is his heart, and ready to misgive in all his preparations for it! how great is his tendency to self-deception! and how closely is he beset with snares and diversions, at every step of his journey towards it! For all this, it is true, there is a provision made, which is free as the heaven itself, and equal to his utmost necessities; but, in order to appreciate this provision, or to bring his soul to reliance on it in such a way as to be made active, he must feel his work to be formidable, and meet its many details with fear and trembling.

It is the hazards of the Christian life, either present or prospective, which give birth to jealousy, as well as sustain its existence, and justify its operations; and, as these hazards continue so long as the man continues in this world, it ought to continue also, and its suggestions and maxims to be listened to, even by the best conditioned of the saints, till the earthly house of this tabernacle is dissolved; but if they have a call to suspect themselves, the same call must be louder, and more urgent, as addressed to those who have sunk into degeneracy. It were no doubt a higher attainment to be above the need of circumspection, and to have the soul attracted to the business of religion by its own intrinsic excellence; and assuredly, the man who can rise to this, is warranted to do so in the spirit of gratitude and praise. But, viewing the matter generally, it may be safely affirmed, that this world is not the scene for such altitude of bliss, nor is the influence of pure disinterested love, in all cases, the best excitement to those specific exercises which are characteristic of the present state. It partakes too much of quiescence and contemplation, for keeping alive those convictions, and sorrows, and severities of discipline, which tend most directly to the crucifying of the flesh. In one word, it is heaven; and the man who is caught up into it here, is found, for the most part, to forget himself, and suddenly to relapse into sin. We plead not, of course, for the exclusion of love in its other modifications; for where it is absent, every thing is absent which gives life to Christian exercise. But we plead for that attitude of soul, which lays open to its own inspection the actual state of things within it and around it, divesting it of subterfuge, and freeing it from illusion, and thus summoning its entire operations to the point of greatest danger.

We count on it, then, that the awakening of this mood of mind, and the judicious Christian use of it in the present state of the religious world, is the very thing which is wanted, to check the prevalence of a worldly spirit, and defeat the influence of unwarrantable expectations; thus giving a permanent excitement to individual Christian activity. And if it shall please God, by a visitation of his mercy, to send us deliverance from these woful evils, then may we hope to find in each other a depth of spiritual-mindedness, and an energy of religious character, which is now but rarely to be met with; as well as in the whole of us combined, a power for exterminating irreligion, whether at home or in distant lands, which has not as yet been exemplified.

No one surely can suppose, that, in selecting the principle of jealousy, and setting it thus on high, we are meditating any neglect of the other kinds of exercise, which may be called the ancient and effective allies of Christian godliness; for in this one feeling, if we look at its component parts, we shall find a concentration of all that is competent to the man, or enjoined upon the Christian. There is reason in jealousy, for it is the instrument of sound information;—there is wisdom in it, for it is the use of the fittest means for gaining the highest end;—there is Christian belief in it, either in its principle, or its growth into principle; for the man whom it actuates, is made alive to the realities of a world to come;—there is repentance in it, for it gives rise to a sorrow which corresponds with its own nature, and leads the way to reformation;—there is love in it, for it is a testimony to the excellence of religion, coming forth from the heart;—and there is hope in it, for it puts the soul in motion after that which is seen to be attainable. Thus does it stimulate the sinner, however sullen or obdurate, to think of his situation; or arouse and bring together the living elements of piety, however feeble or disordered; constraining them to the very exercises which tend to their invigoration; and thereby proving itself the censor of indolence, the harbinger of improvement, and the safeguard of Christian attainment.

Is it allowable now to suppose, that the reader of these few pages has found himself the person to whom they apply? Is he bound to confess it, as an honest man, that his spirit is worldly, or his hopes fallacious, or his religious activities relaxed or suspended? Does he feel, withal, the workings of ingenuous desire to be delivered from the body of this death? Then let him give himself to a prayerful perusal of “THE ALMOST CHRISTIAN;” for if there be one thing more than another, which its pages are fitted to produce, it is a godly jealousy. To awaken this, and realize the fruits of it, is the Author's chosen purpose. It is truly a searching volume. Its Author saw the havock which an easy credulity in matters of religion was spreading among professors of his own time; his spirit was stirred within him, at the thought of the delusion which it propagated, and the immensity of the interests which it bartered away; and in discharging a duty to the men of his generation, he has put on record a word in season to us. The volume is now intercepted from the disuse into which it was sinking; a laudable effort is made, to present it afresh to the religious public; and most devoutly is it to be wished, that the exercises which it inculcates, and to which it so honestly leads the way, may become the characteristic of modern professors. The immediate effect of such a revulsion might be, an extensive overthrow of hopes and purposes; but its latter end would be, righteousness and peace. It might lead to that fearfulness which surpriseth the hypocrite; but nothing whatever would it demolish, except those refuges of lies which the hail of a judgment to come must ultimately sweep away.

We cannot, indeed, withhold the remark, although it should be deemed censorious, that there is a very peculiar adaptation of the sentiments of this little book to the character of the times in which we are living. We all know the extent to which we set the fashion to each other in religion as in every thing else, and every wise man will take care so to estimate the spirit of his times, as to ascertain the precise kind of modification into which they tend to form his character. There are times when Christianity is newly introduced among a people, or when an important reformation in its general profession has been recently effected, or when professors are assailed by persecution, or when a general revival of religion in its life and power has taken place, and in these times there is a tendency to the production of a severe sanctity in morals, and a peculiarly fervent and decided piety. In this state of things, the man of neutrality cannot subsist, and must either make an effort to come up to the general standard, or see himself left in the congregation of sinners. Such, however, are not our times. We have grown old in the enjoyment of peace, and the use of external privilege; the public creeds of most of our churches are substantially orthodox: this has produced, and is still maintaining a general soundness of religious sentiment among the professing community at large. The continued enforcement of Christian doctrine on the minds of the people, is preserving, if not extending a commendable decency of deportment; the attention paid to religious training among the young, with the remaining purity of Christian fellowship so far as it prevails, and the mingling influence of pious example from those who are decidedly Christian, have refined away the coarseness of the age, and induced even scepticism herself to speak with courtesy of the religion of the land. Now, let these things be put together and seriously thought of—let their tendency to induce a man to think well of himself, since he confessedly holds so much, and stands so well with others around him, be fairly estimated, and surely it will be granted that there is reason at least to inquire whether amidst the ease and tranquillity of our times, we are not egregiously forgetting ourselves, and singing a dismal lullaby over the slumberings of piety. When a man gives himself to considerations like these in the deep seclusion of serious thought—when he connects them for illustration with what he sees and hears, and allows them to speak their native language to his understanding and his heart, he cannot suppress the working suspicion—that we are setting a fashion to each other of a kind the most injurious, and that the very generation to which we belong, more fearfully perhaps than any other, is abounding with “ALMOST CHRISTIANS.”

For such a state of things, the reader has in his hands an admirable antidote, applied with a plainness, and point, and delightful felicity of scriptural illustration, which render it both impressive and memorable. MATTHEW MEAD, it is very true, was a man of olden habits, and to the charms of modern diction, his book has no pretensions; but we see him in the garb of his times, and that taste must be pettish indeed, which would wish to see him in any other. The style of the book, although unadorned, is yet perspicuous and striking, and the very homeliness of its phrases, in instances not a few, is happily fitted to promote its efficiency.

It is a book of topics, containing much meaning in few words; and the serious reader may often regret that more has not been said, on matters which he feels to be so very interesting. But this appearance of defect is in reality an excellence; its aim is to provoke a scrutiny of character; and the writer who proposes this, has done enough, when he has shown cause for such a scrutiny, digested maxims for conducting it, and impressed his reader with the importance of the subject. The thing wanted here, is not an agent to do the work for a man, but a guide and monitor to furnish him with facilities, and ply him with motives to do it for himself.

It is a book of dissections, in which every department of the Christian character is skilfully divested of its covering, and laid open to impartial survey, and although it would be too much to say, that in the performance of a task, which exhibits such diversity, and requires such a nicety of spiritual discrimination, nothing has been done to disturb the peace of a saint; yet the instances in which its Author is chargeable with this, we take to be very few; while perhaps there is not one of them in which the pain produced, if rightly improved, is not salutary in its tendency, or fails to lead on to more exalted enjoyment. But supposing that instances do occur, in which the peace of conscience is unduly disturbed, or that a sentiment here and there, has dropped from the pen of the Author, which tends to a false or injurious alarm, still it is better that a reparable injury should be suffered, than that a delusion which is irreparable should remain undetected. It is the lot of the messenger, who either lifts up his voice or his pen to publish the counsel of God to man in the present complex state of society, that he cannot sound an alarm to the wicked, without putting some of the righteous in fear; nor can he minister consolation to the latter, without at least the hazard of having his message misapplied by the perversity of the latter. For these things, however, he is not accountable, although it is well that they overawe him. The scene in which he labours, is adjusted to his hand, by a wisdom which cannot err, and which has left him no choice, but to take things as he finds them; guarding himself as he can against either extreme, and imploring as he goes on, that, by the mercy of the Lord, he may be found faithful.

But leaving the Treatise to speak for itself, we beseech the man who is but almost a Christian, in travelling through its pages to avail himself of its aid. We ask him simply, to reason the matter on the principles and findings which it sets before him; but to do this in that spirit of earnest and humble inquisitiveness, which befits so grave a subject: and if such a spirit be far from him, or appearing to evaporate as he proceeds, let him pause and invoke its return, from that God in Jesus Christ, who maketh the heart of the rash to understand doctrine. As he wishes to prosper, let him never forget, that while it is easy to show him the proper means, and possible to bring him into contact with these, yet the disposition to apply the means in such a way, as to gain their end, cometh forth from Him, who is wonderful in counsel and excellent in working.

D. Y.

Perth, December, 1825.

CONTENTS.

	Page
DEDICATION,	35
To the Reader,	39
Introduction,	47
QUEST. I. How far a man may go in the way to heaven, and yet be but almost a Christian: this shown in twenty several steps,	63
SECT. I. A man may have much knowledge, and yet be but almost a Christian,	ib.
SECT. II. A man may have great and eminent gifts; yea, spiritual, and yet be but almost a Christian,	66
SECT. III. A man may have a high profession of religion, be much in external duties of godliness, and yet be but almost a Christian,	70
SECT. IV. A man may go far in opposing his sin, and yet be but almost a Christian,	77
SECT. V. A man may hate sin, and yet be but almost a Christian,	84
SECT. VI. A man may make great vows and promises, strong purposes and resolutions against sin, and yet be but an almost Christian,	86
SECT. VII. A man may maintain a strife and combat against sin in himself, and yet be but almost a Christian,	89
SECT. VIII. A man may be a member of the church of Christ, and yet be but almost a Christian,	96
SECT. IX. A man may have great hopes of heaven, and yet be but almost a Christian,	97
SECT. X. A man may be under visible changes, and yet be but almost a Christian,	100
SECT. XI. A man may be very zealous in matters of religion, and yet be but almost a Christian,	104

	Page
SECT. XII. A man may be much in prayer, and yet be but almost a Christian,	110
SECT. XIII. A man may suffer for Christ, and yet be but almost a Christian,	114
SECT. XIV. A man may be called of God and embrace his call, and yet be but an almost Christian,	116
SECT. XV. A man may have the Spirit of God, and yet be but almost a Christian,	118
SECT. XVI. A man may have faith, and yet be but almost a Christian,	121
SECT. XVII. A man may have a love to the people of God, and yet be but almost a Christian,	125
SECT. XVIII. A man may obey the commands of God, and yet be but almost a Christian,	129
SECT. XIX. A man may be sanctified, and yet be but almost a Christian,	133
SECT. XX. A man may do all (as to external duties and worship) that a true Christian can, and yet be but almost a Christian,	136
QUEST. II. Whence it is that many go far and yet no farther?	140
QUEST. III. What difference between a natural conscience and a renewed conscience?—answered, in several particulars,	145
QUEST. IV. Whence is it that many are but almost Christians, when they have gone thus far?	157
QUEST. V. What is the reason that many go no farther in the profession of religion, than to be almost Christians?	166
Application,	174
Use of Examination,	177
Use of Caution,	187
Use of Exhortation,	200

TO THE
CONGREGATION AT ST. SEPULCHRE'S, THAT WERE THE
AUDITORS OF THESE SERMONS,
GRACE AND PEACE BE MULTIPLIED.

BELOVED,

WHAT the meaning of that providence was, that called me to the occupation of my talent amongst you this summer, will be best read and understood by the effects of it upon your own souls. The kindly increase of grace and holiness in heart and life, can only prove it to have been in mercy. Where this is not the fruit of the word, there it becomes a judgment. The word travels with life or death, salvation or damnation, and bringeth forth one or the other in every soul that hears it. I would not for a world (were it in my power to make the choice) that my labours, which were meant and designed for the promotion of your immortal souls to the glory of the other world, in a present pursuance of the things of your peace, should be found to have been a ministration of death and condemnation, in the great day of Jesus Christ. Yet this the Lord knoweth, is the too common effect of the most plain and powerful preaching of the gospel. "The waters of the sanctuary" do not always heal where they come, for there are "miry and marshy places that shall be given to salt." The same word is elsewhere in Scripture rendered "barrenness:" He "turneth a fruitful land into barrenness;"—so that the judgment denounced upon these miry and marshy places is, that the curse of barrenness shall rest upon them, notwithstanding the “waters of the sanctuary overflow them.”

It is said, with certainty, that the gospel inflicteth a death of its own, as well as the law; or else how are those trees in Jude said to be “twice dead, and plucked up by the roots.” Yea, that which in itself is the greatest mercy, through the interposition of men’s lusts, and the efficacy of this cursed sin of unbelief, turns to the greatest judgment, as the richest and most generous wine makes the sharpest vinegar. Our Lord Christ himself, the choicest mercy with which the bowels of God could bless a perishing world; whose coming, himself bearing witness, was on no less an errand than that of eternal life and blessedness to the lost and cursed sons of Adam; yet to how many was he a “stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence;” yea, “a gin, and a snare;” and that to both the houses of Israel, the only professing people of God at that day in the world? And is he not a stone of stumbling in the ministry of the gospel to many professors to this very day, upon which they fall and are broken? When he saith, “Blessed is he whosoever shall not be offended in me,” he therein plainly supposes, that both in his person and doctrine the generality of men would be offended in him.

Not that this is the design of Christ and the gospel, but it comes so to pass through the corruptions of the hearts of men, whereby they make light of Christ, and stand out against that life and grace which the Lord Jesus by his blood so dearly purchased, and is by the preaching of the gospel so freely tendered; the wilful refusal whereof will as surely double our damnation, as the acceptance thereof will secure our eternal salvation.

O consider, it is a thing of the most serious concern in the world, how we carry ourselves under the gospel, and with what dispositions and affections of heart soul-seasons of grace are entertained; this being taken into the consideration to give it weight, that we are the nearer to heaven or hell, to salvation or damnation, by every ordinance we sit under. Boast not therefore of privileges enjoyed, with neglect of the important duties thereby required. Remember Capernaum's case and tremble. As many go to heaven by the very gates of hell, so more go to hell by the gates of heaven; in that the number of those that profess Christ is greater than the number of those that truly close with Christ.

Beloved, I know the preaching of the gospel hath proselyted many of you into a profession; but I fear that but few of you are brought by it to a true close with the Lord Christ for salvation. I beseech you bear with my jealousy, for it is the fruit of a tender love for your precious souls. Most men are good Christians in the verdict of their own opinion; but you know the law alloweth no man to be a witness in his own case, because their affection usually overreacheth conscience, and self-love deceiveth truth for its own interest.

The heart of man is the greatest impostor and cheat in the world; God himself states it—"The heart is deceitful above all things." Some of the deceits thereof you will find discovered in this Treatise, which shows you, that every grace hath its counterfeit, and that the highest profession may be, where true conversion is not.

The design of it is not to “break the bruised reed, nor to quench the smoking flax.” Not to discourage the weakest believer, but to awaken formal professors. I would not sadden the hearts of any “whom God would not have made sad;” though I know it is hard to expose the dangerous state and condition of a professing hypocrite, but that the weak Christian will think himself concerned in the discovery. And therefore, as I preached a sermon on sincerity among you, for the support and encouragement of such, so I purposed to have printed it with this. But who can be master of his own purposes? That is, as I am under such daily variety of providences, your kindly acceptance of this, will make me a debtor for that.

The dedication hereof belongs to you on a double account; for as it had not been preached, but that love to your souls caused it, so it had much less been printed, but that your importunate desire procured it. And therefore what entertainment soever it finds in the world, yet I hope I may expect you will welcome it, especially considering it was born under your roof, and therefore hopes to find favour in your eyes, and room in your hearts.

Accept it, I beseech you, as a public acknowledgment of the engagements which your great, and, I think I may say, unparalleled respects have laid me under, which I can no way compensate but by my prayers; and if you will take them for satisfaction, I promise to be your remembrancer at the throne of grace, whilst I am

MATTHEW MEAD.

TO

THE READER.

READER,

I KNOW how customary it is for men to ascend the public stage with premised apologies for the weakness and unworthiness of their labours, which is an argument that their desires (either for the sake of others' profit, or their own credit, or both) are stretched beyond the bounds of their abilities; and that they covet to commend themselves to the world's censure, in a better dress than common infirmity will allow. For my own part, I may truly say with Gideon, "Behold, my thousand is the meanest," my talent is the smallest, "and I am the least in my Father's house;" and therefore this appearance in public is not the fruit of my own choice, which would rather have been on some other subject, wherein I stand in some sense indebted to the world, or else somewhat more digested, and possibly better fitted for common acceptance. But this is but to consult the interest of a man's own name, which, in matters of this concern, is no better than a "sowing to the flesh," and the harvest of such a seed-time will be "in corruption."

Thou hast here one of the saddest considerations imaginable presented to thee, and that is, "How far it is possible a man may go in a profession of religion, and yet, after all, fall short of salvation; how far he may run, and yet not so run as to obtain." This, I say, is sad, but not so sad as true; for our Lord Christ doth plainly attest it: "Strive to enter in at the strait gate; for many, I say unto you, will seek to enter in, and shall not be able."

My design herein is, that the formal, sleepy professor may be awakened, and the close hypocrite discovered: but my fear is, that weak believers may be hereby discouraged; for, as it is hard to show how low a child of God may fall into sin, and yet have true grace, but that the sinner will be apt thereupon to presume; so it is as hard to show how high a hypocrite may rise in a profession, and yet have no grace, but that the believer will be apt thereupon to despond. The prevention whereof I have carefully endeavoured, by showing, that though a man may go thus far, and yet be but almost a Christian, yet a man may fall short of this, and be a true Christian notwithstanding. Judge not, therefore, thy state by any one character thou findest laid down of a false professor; but read the whole, and then make a judgment: for I have cared, as not to "give children's bread to dogs," so not to use the dog's whip to scare the children; yet I could wish that this book might fall into the hands of such only whom it chiefly concerns, who "have a name to live, and yet are dead;" being busy with the "form of godliness," but strangers to the "power of it." These are the proper subjects of this treatise: and the Lord follow it with his blessing wherever it comes, that it may be an awakening word to all such, and especially to that generation of profligate professors with which this age abounds; who, if they keep to their church, bow the knee, talk over a few prayers, and at a good time receive the sacrament; think they do enough for heaven, and hereupon judge their condition safe, and their salvation sure; though there be a hell of sin in their hearts, “and the poison of asps is under their lips;” their minds being as yet carnal and unconverted, and their conversations filthy and unsanctified. If eternal life be of so easy attainment, and to be had at so cheap a rate, why did our Lord Christ tell us, “Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it?” And why should the apostle perplex us with such a needless injunction, “to give diligence to make our calling and election sure?” Certainly, therefore, it is no such easy thing to be saved, as many make it; and that thou wilt see plainly in the following discourse. I have been somewhat short in the application of it; and therefore let me here be thy remembrancer in five important duties:—

First, “Take heed of resting in a form of godliness; as if duties, ex opere operato, could confer grace. A lifeless formality is advanced to a very high esteem in the world, as a “cab of dove’s dung” was sold in the famine of Samaria at a very dear rate. Alas! the profession of godliness is but a sandy foundation to build the hope of an immortal soul upon for eternity. Remember, the Lord Jesus Christ called him a foolish builder, “that founded his house upon the sand," and the sad event proved him so, "for it fell, and great was the fall of it." O therefore lay thy foundation by faith upon the rock Christ Jesus; look to Christ through all, and rest upon Christ in all.

Secondly, "Labour to see an excellency in the power of godliness," a beauty in the life of Christ. If the means of grace have a loveliness in them, surely grace itself hath much more; for, "the goodness of the means lies in its suitableness and serviceableness to the end." The form of godliness hath no goodness in it, any farther than it steads and becomes useful to the soul in the power and practice of godliness. The life of holiness is the only excellent life; it is the life of saints and angels in heaven; yea, it is the life of God in himself. As it is a great proof of the baseness and filthiness of sin, that sinners seek to cover it; so it is a great proof of the excellency of godliness that so many pretend to it. The very hypocrite's fair profession pleads the cause of religion, although the hypocrite is then really worst, when he is seemingly best.

Thirdly, "Look upon things to come as the greatest realities;" for things that are not believed work no more upon the affections than if they had no being; and this is the grand reason why the generality of men suffer their affections to go after the world, setting the creature in the place of God in their hearts.

Most men judge of the reality of things by their visibility and proximity to sense; and, therefore, the choice of that wretched cardinal becomes their option, who would not leave his part in Paris for his part in Paradise. Sure, whatever his interest might be in the former, he had little enough in the latter. Well may covetousness be called idolatry, when it thus chooses the world for its god.

O! consider—eternity is no dream; hell and the worm that never dies, is no melancholy conceit. Heaven is no feigned Elysium; there is the greatest reality imaginable in these things; though they are spiritual, and out of the ken of sense, yet they are real, and within the view of faith. “Look not therefore at the things which are seen, but look at the things which are not seen; for the things that are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal.”

Fourthly, “Set a high rate upon thy soul.” What we lightly prize, we easily part with. Many men sell their souls at the rate of profane Esau’s birth-right, “for a morsel of bread;” nay, “for that which,” in the sense of the Holy Ghost, “is not bread.” O consider thy soul is the most precious and invaluable jewel in the world; it is the most beautiful piece of God’s workmanship in the whole creation; it is that which bears the image of God, and which was bought with the blood of the Son of God: and shall we not set a value upon it, and count it precious?

The apostle Peter speaks of three very precious things:—

1. A precious Christ.
2. Precious Promises.
3. Precious Faith.

Now, the preciousness of all these lies in their usefulness to the soul. Christ is precious, as being the redeemer of precious souls,—the Promises are precious, as making over this precious Christ to precious souls,—Faith is precious, as bringing a precious soul to close with a precious Christ, as he is held forth in the precious promises. O take heed that thou art not found over-valuing other things, and under-valuing thy soul. Shall thy flesh, nay thy beast, be loved, and shall thy soul be slighted? Wilt thou clothe and pamper thy body, and yet take no care of thy soul? This is, as if a man should feed his dog, and starve his child. “Meats for the belly, and the belly for meats; but God will destroy both it and them.” O let not a tottering, perishing carcass have all your time and care, as if the life and salvation of thy soul were not worth the while.

Lastly, “Meditate much on the strictness and suddenness of that judgment-day, through which thou and I must pass into an everlasting state; wherein God, the impartial judge, will require an account at our hands of all our talents and intruments.” We must then account for time, how we have spent that; for estate, how we have employed that; for strength, how we have laid out that; for afflictions and mercies, how they have been improved; for the relations we stood in here, how they have been discharged; and for seasons and means of grace, how they have been husbanded. And look, how “we have sowed here, we shall reap hereafter.”

Reader, these are things that of all others deserve most of, and call loudest for, our utmost care and endeavours, though by the most least minded. To consider what a spirit of atheism (if we may judge the tree by the fruits, and the principle by the practice) the hearts of most men are filled with, who live, as if God were not to be served, nor Christ to be sought, nor lust to be mortified, nor self to be denied, nor the scripture to be believed, nor the judgment-day to be minded, nor hell to be feared, nor heaven to be desired, nor the soul to be valued; but give up themselves to a worse than brutish sensuality, “to work all uncleanness with greediness,” living without God in the world—this is a meditation fit enough to break our hearts, if at least we were of holy David’s temper, who “beheld the transgressors, and was grieved,” and had “rivers of waters running down his eyes, because men kept not God’s laws.”

The prevention and correction of this soul-destroying distemper, is not the least design of this Treatise now put into thy hand. Though the chief virtue of this receipt lies in its sovereign use to assuage and cure the swelling tympany of hypocrisy, yet it may serve also, with God’s blessing, as a plaster for the plague-sore of profaneness, if timely applied by serious meditation, and carefully kept on by constant prayer.

Reader, expect nothing of curiosity or quaintness, for then I shall deceive thee; but if thou wouldst have a touch-stone for the trial of thy state, possibly this may serve thee. If thou art either a stranger to a profession, or a hypocrite under a profession, then read and tremble, for thou art the man here pointed at.

———— Mutato nomine de te Fabula narratur. ————

HORAT.

But if the kingdom of God be come with power into thy soul; if Christ be formed in thee; if thy heart be upright and sincere with God, then read and rejoice.

I fear I have transgressed the bounds of an epistle. The mighty God, whose prerogative it is to teach to profit, whether by the tongue or the pen, by speaking or writing, bless this tract, that it may be to thee as a cloud of rain to the dry ground, dropping fatness to thy soul, that so thy fleece being watered with the “dew of heaven,” thou mayest “grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.” In whom I am thy

Friend and Servant,

MATTHEW MEAD.

London, October, 1661.

THE
ALMOST CHRISTIAN
DISCOVERED.

Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.
ACTS xxvi. 28.

IN this chapter you have the Apostle Paul's apology and defensive plea, which he makes for himself against those blind Jews which so maliciously prosecuted him before Agrippa, Festus, Bernice, and the council. In which plea he chiefly insists upon three things:

1. The manner of his life before conversion.
2. The manner of his conversion.
3. The manner of his life after conversion.

How he lived before conversion, he tells you, ver. 4—13. How God wrought on him to conversion, he tells you, ver. 13—18. How he lived after conversion, he tells you, ver. 19—23. Before conversion he was very pharisaical. The manner of his conversion was very wonderful. The fruit of his conversion was very remarkable.

Before conversion he persecuted the gospel which others preached: after conversion, he preached the gospel which himself had persecuted.

While he was a persecutor of the gospel, the Jews loved him; but now that, by the grace of God, he was become a preacher of the gospel, now the Jews hate him, and sought to kill him.

He was once against Christ, and then many were for him; but now that he was for Christ, all were against him; his being an enemy to Jesus, made others his friends; but when he came to own Jesus, then they became his enemies. And this was the great charge they had against him, that of a great opposer he was become a great professor. Because God had changed him, therefore this enraged them: as if they would be the worse, because God had made him better. God had wrought on him by grace, and they seem to envy him the grace of God. He preached no treason, nor sowed no sedition; only he preached repentance, and faith in Christ, and the resurrection, and for this he was "called in question."

This is the breviate and sum of Paul's defence and plea for himself, which you find in the sequel of the chapter had a different effect upon his judges.

Festus seems to censure him, ver. 24. Agrippa seems to be convinced by him, ver. 28. The whole bench seem to acquit him, ver. 30, 31. Festus thinks Paul was beside himself. Agrippa is almost persuaded to be such a one as himself.

Festus thinks him mad, because he did not understand the doctrine of Christ and the resurrection: "much learning hath made thee mad." Agrippa is so affected with his plea, that he is almost wrought into his principle: Paul pleads so effectually for his religion, that Agrippa seems to be upon the turning point to his profession. “Then Agrippa said to Paul, almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.”

“Almost.”—The words make some debate among the learned. I shall not trouble you with the various hints upon them by Valla, Simplisius, Beza, Erasmus, and others. I take the words as we read them, and they show what an efficacy Paul’s doctrine had upon Agrippa’s conscience. Though he would not be converted, yet he could not but be convinced; his conscience was touched, though his heart was not renewed.

Observation. There is that in religion, which carries its own evidence along with it even to the consciences of ungodly men.

“Thou persuadest me.”—The word is from the Hebrew, and it signifies both suadere and persuadere; either to use arguments to prevail, or to prevail by the arguments used. Now it is to be taken in the latter sense here, to show the influence of Paul’s argument upon Agrippa, which had almost proselyted him to the profession of Christianity. “Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.”

“A Christian.”—I hope I need not tell you what a Christian is, though I am persuaded many that are called Christians, do not know what a Christian is, or if they do, yet they do not know what it is to be a Christian. A Christian is a disciple of Jesus Christ, one that believes in, and follows Christ. As one that embraces the doctrine of Arminius, is called an Arminian; and he that owns the doctrine and way of Luther, is called a Lutheran; so he that embraces, and owns, and follows the doctrine of Jesus Christ, he is called a Christian.

The word is taken more largely, and more strictly: more largely, and so all that profess Christ come in the flesh, are called Christians, in opposition to heathens that do not know Christ; and to the poor blind Jews, that will not own Christ; and to the Mahometan, that prefers Mahomet, above Christ. But now in Scripture, the word is of a more strict and narrow acceptation, it is used only to denominate the true disciples and followers of Christ; “the disciples were first called Christians at Antioch; if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed;” that is, as a member and disciple of Christ; and so in the text, “Almost thou persuadest me to be a Christian.”

The word is used but in these three places, as I find, in all the New Testament, and in each of them it is used in the sense afore-mentioned.

The Italians make the name to be a name of reproach among them, and usually abuse the word Christian to signify a fool. But if, as the apostle saith, “the preaching of Christ is to the world foolishness,” then it is no wonder that the disciples of Christ are to the world fools. Yet it is true, in a sound sense, that so they are; for the whole of godliness is a mystery. A man must die, that would live; he must be empty, that would be full; he must be lost, that would be found; he must have nothing, that would have all things; he must be blind, that would have illumination; he must be condemned, that would have redemption; so he must be a fool, that would be a Christian. “If any man among you seems to be wise, let him become a fool, that he may be wise.” He is the true Christian that is the world’s fool, but wise to salvation.

Thus you have the sense and meaning of the words briefly explained. The text needs no division, and yet it is a pity the almost should not be divided from the Christian. Though it is of little avail to divide them as they are linked in the text, unless I could divide them as they are united in your hearts; this would be a blessed division, if the almost might be taken from the Christian: that so you may not be only propemodum, but admodum; not only almost, but altogether Christians. This is God’s work to effect it, but is our duty to persuade to it; and O that God would help me to manage this subject so, that you may say, in the conclusion, “Thou persuadest me, not almost, but altogether to be a Christian!”

The observation that I shall propound to handle is this:

Doctrine. There are very many in the world that are almost, and yet but almost Christians; many that are near heaven, and yet are never the nearer; many that are within a little of salvation, and yet shall never enjoy the least salvation; they are within sight of heaven, and yet shall never have a sight of God.

There are two sad expressions in scripture, which I cannot but take notice of in this place. The one is concerning the truly righteous. The other is concerning the seemingly righteous.

It is said of the truly righteous, he shall “scarcely be saved;” and it is said of the seemingly righteous, he shall be almost saved: “Thou art not far from the kingdom of God.”

The righteous shall be saved with a scarcely, that is, through much difficulty; he shall go to heaven through many sad fears of hell. The hypocrite shall be saved with an almost, that is, he shall go to hell through many fair hopes of heaven.

There are two things which arise from hence of very serious meditation. The one is, how often a believer may miscarry, how low he may fall, and yet have true grace. The other is, how far a hypocrite may go in the way to heaven, how high he may attain, and yet have no grace.

The saint may be cast down very near to hell, and yet shall never come there; and the hypocrite may be lifted up very near to heaven, and yet never come there. The saint may almost perish, and yet be saved eternally; the hypocrite may almost be saved, and yet perish finally. For the saint at worst is really a believer, and the hypocrite at best is really a sinner.

Before I handle the doctrine, I must premise three things, which are of great use for the establishing of weak believers, that they may not be shaken and discouraged by this doctrine.

First, There is nothing in the doctrine that should be matter of stumbling or discouragement to weak Christians. The gospel doth not speak these things to wound believers, but to awaken sinners and formal professors.

As there are none more averse than weak believers, to apply the promises and comforts of the gospel to themselves, for whom they are properly designed; so there are none more ready than they to apply the threats and severest things of the word to themselves, for whom they were never intended. As the disciples, when Christ told them, "One of you shall betray me;" they that were innocent suspected themselves most, and therefore cry out, "Master, is it I?" So weak Christians, when they hear sinners reproved, or the hypocrite laid open, in the ministry of the word, they presently cry out, "Is it I?"

It is the hypocrite's fault to sit under the trials and discoveries of the word, and yet not to mind them: and it is the weak Christian's fault to draw sad conclusions of their own state from premises which nothing concern them.

There is indeed great use of such doctrine as this is to all believers:

1. To make them look to their standing, upon what foundation they are, and to see that the foundation of their hope be well laid, that they build not upon the sand, but upon a rock.

2. It helps to raise our admiration of the distinguishing love of God, in bringing us into the way everlasting, when so many perish from the way, and in overpowering our souls into a true conversion, when so many take up with a graceless profession.

3. It incites to that excellent duty of heart-searching, that so we approve ourselves to God in sincerity.

4. It engages the soul in double diligence, that it may be found not only believing, but persevering in faith to the end.

These duties, and such as these, make this doctrine of use to all believers; but they ought not to make use of it as a stumbling-block in the way of their peace and comfort.

My design in preaching on this subject, is not to make sad the souls of those whom Christ will not have made sad; I would bring water not to “quench the flax that is smoking,” but to put out that false fire that is of the sinner’s own kindling, lest walking all his days by the light thereof, he shall at last “lie down in sorrow.” My aim is to level the mountain of the sinner’s confidence, not to weaken the hand of the believer’s faith and dependence; to awaken and bring in secure formal sinners, not to discourage weak believers.

Secondly, I would premise this; though many may go far, very far in the way to heaven, and yet fall short, yet that soul that hath the least true grace shall never fall short; “the righteous shall hold on his way.”

Though some may do very much in a way of duty, as I shall show hereafter, and yet miscarry; yet that soul that doth duty with the least sincerity, shall never miscarry; “for he saveth the upright in heart.”

The least measure of true grace is as saving as the greatest; it saves as surely, though not so comfortably. The least grace gives a full interest in the blood of Christ, whereby we are thoroughly purged; and it gives a full interest in the strength and power of Christ, whereby we shall be certainly preserved.

Christ keeps faith in the soul, and faith keeps the soul in Christ; and so “we are kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation.”

Thirdly, I would premise this; they that can hear such truths as this, without serious reflection and self-examination, I must suspect the goodness of their condition.

You will suspect that man to be next door to a bankrupt, that never casts up his accounts nor looks over his book; and I as verily think that man a hypocrite, that never searches nor deals with his own heart. He that goes on in a road of duties without any uneasiness or doubting of his state, I doubt no man’s state more than his.

When we see a man sick, and yet not sensible, we conclude the tokens of death are upon him. So when sinners have no sense of their spiritual condition, it is plain that they are dead in sin; the tokens of eternal death are upon them. These things being premised, which I desire you would carry along in your mind while we travel through this subject, I come to speak to the proposition more distinctly and closely.

Doctrine. That there are very many in the world that are almost, and yet but almost Christians.

I shall demonstrate the truth of the proposition, and then proceed to a more distinct prosecution.

I. I shall demonstrate the truth of the proposition; and I shall do it by scripture-evidence, which speaks plainly and fully to the case.

First, The young man in the gospel is an eminent proof of this truth; there you read of one that came to Christ to learn of him the way to heaven: “ Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may have eternal life?” Our Lord Christ tells him, “ If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments:” and when Christ tells him which, he answers, “ Lord, all these I have kept from my youth up; what lack I yet?”

Now do but see how far this man went.

1. He obeyed—he did not only hear the commands of God, but he kept them; now the Scripture saith, “ Blessed is he that hears the word of God, and keeps it.”

2. He obeyed universally—not this or that command, but both this and that; he did not halve it with God, or pick and choose which were easiest to be done, and leave the rest; no, but he obeys all: “ All these things have I kept.”

3. He obeyed constantly—not in a fit of zeal only, but in a continual series of duty; his goodness was not, as Ephraim’s, “ like the morning-dew that passes away;” no, “ All these things have I kept from my youth up.”

4. He professeth his desire to know and do more—to perfect that which was lacking of his obedience: and therefore he goes to Christ to instruct him in his duty: “ Master, what lack I yet?” Now would you not think this a good man? Alas! how few go this far? And yet as far as he went, he went not far enough; “he was almost, and yet but almost a Christian;” for he was an unsound hypocrite; he forsakes Christ at last, and cleaves to his lust. This then is a full proof of the truth of the doctrine.

Second, A second proof of it is that of the parable of the virgins in St. Matthew: see what a progress they make, how far they go in a profession of Christ.

1. They are called “virgins.”—Now this is a name given in the Scripture, both in the Old Testament and the New, to the saints of Christ: “The virgins love thee:” so in the revelation, the “one hundred forty and four thousand” that stood with the Lamb on mount Zion, are called “virgins.” They are called virgins, because they are not defiled with the “corruptions that are in the world through lust.” Now these here seem to be of that sort, for they are called virgins.

2. They take their lamps—that is, they make a profession of Christ.

3. They had some kind of oil in their lamps. They had some convictions and some faith, though not the faith of God’s elect, to keep their profession alive, to keep the lamp burning.

4. They went—their profession was not an idle profession; they did perform duties, frequented ordinances, and did many things commanded: they made a progress—they went.

5. They went forth—they went and outwent, they left many behind them; this speaks out their separation from the world.

6. They went with the “wise virgins”—they joined themselves to those who had joined themselves to the Lord, and were companions of them that were companions of Christ.

7. They go “forth to meet the bridegroom”—this speaks out their owning and seeking after Christ.

8. When they heard the cry of the bridegroom coming, “they arose and trimmed their lamps;” they profess Christ more highly, hoping now to go in with the bridegroom.

9. They sought for true grace. Now do not we say, the desires of grace are grace? and so they are, if true and timely; if sound and seasonable. Why lo here a desire of grace in these virgins, “Give us of your oil.”

It was a desire of true grace, but it was not a true desire of grace; it was not true, because not timely; unsound, as being unseasonable; it was too late. Their folly was in not taking oil when they took their lamps; their time of seeking grace was when they came to Christ; it was too late to seek it when Christ came to them. They should have sought for that when they took up their profession: it was too late to seek it at the coming of the bridegroom. And therefore “they were shut out;” and though they cry for entrance, “Lord, Lord, open to us;” yet the Lord Christ tells them, “I know you not.”

You see how far these virgins go in a profession of Jesus Christ, and how long they continue in it, even till the bridegroom came; they go to the very door of heaven, and there, like the Sodomites, perish with their hands upon the very threshold of glory. They were almost Christians, and yet but almost; almost saved, and yet perish.

You that are professors of the gospel of Christ, stand and tremble: if they that have gone beyond us fall short of heaven, what shall become of us that fall short of them? If they that are virgins, that profess Christ, that have some faith in their profession, such as it is, that have some fruit in their faith, that outstrip others that seek Christ, that improve their profession, and suit themselves to their profession—nay, that seek grace; if such as these be but almost Christians, Lord, what are we?

Third, If these two witnesses be not sufficient to prove the truth, and confirm the credit of the proposition, take a third; and that shall be from the Old Testament, Isaiah lviii. 2. See what God saith of that people; he gives them a very high character for a choice people, one would think: “They seek me daily; they delight to know my ways, as a nation that did righteousness, and forsook not the ordinance of their God; they ask of me the ordinances of justice; they take delight in approaching to God.”

See how far these went; if God had not said they were rotten and unsound, we should have taken them for the “he-goats before the flock,” and ranked them among the worthies. Pray observe,

1. They seek God.—Now this is the proper character of a true saint—to seek God. True saints are called, “seekers of God.” “This is the generation of them that seek him, that seek thy face, O Jacob;" or, O God of Jacob. Lo, here a generation of them that seek God; and are not these the saints of God?—Nay, farther,

2. They seek him daily.—Here is diligence backed with continuance, day by day; that is, every day, from day to day. They did not seek him by fits and starts, nor in a time of trouble and affliction only, as many do. "Lord, in trouble have they visited thee; they poured out a prayer when thy chastening was upon them." Many when God visits them, then they visit him, but not till then; when God poureth out his afflictions, then they pour out their supplications. This is seamen's devotion; when the storms have brought them to "their wits' end, then they cry to the Lord in their trouble." Many never cry to God, till they are at their wits' end; they never come to God for help, so long as they can help themselves. But now these here, whom God speaks of, are more zealous in their devotion; the others make a virtue of necessity, but these seem to make conscience of duty; for, saith God, "they seek me daily." Sure this is, one would think, a note of sincerity. Job saith of the hypocrite, "Will he always call upon God?" Surely not; but now this people call upon God always, "they seek him daily:" certainly these are no hypocrites.

3. Saith God, "they delight to know my ways." Sure this frees them from the suspicion of hypocrisy; for, they say not unto God, "Depart from us; we desire not the knowledge of thy ways."

4. They are "as a nation that did righteousness."

Not only as a nation that spake righteousness, or knew righteousness, or professed righteousness; but as a nation that did righteousness, that practised nothing but what was just and right. They appeared, to the judgment of the world, as good as the best.

5. They forsook not the ordinances of their God. — They seem true to their principles, constant to their profession, better than many among us, that cast off duties, and forsake the ordinances of God: but these hold out in their profession; “they forsook not the ordinances of God.”

6. “They ask of me,” saith God, “the ordinances of justice.” They will not make their own will the rule of right and wrong, but the law and will of God: and therefore, in all their dealings with men, they desire to be guided and counselled by God: “They ask of me the ordinances of justice.”

7. They take delight in approaching to God. Sure this cannot be the guise of a hypocrite. “Will he delight himself in the almighty?” saith Job:—no, he will not. Though God is the chief delight of man, (having every thing in him to render him lovely, as was said of Titus Vespasian,) yet the hypocrites will not delight in God. Till the affections are made spiritual, there is no affection to things that are spiritual. God is a spiritual good, and therefore hypocrites cannot delight in God. But these are a people that delight in approaching to God.

8. They were a people that were much in fasting: “Wherefore have we fasted,” say they, “and thou seest not?” Now this is a duty that doth not suppose and require truth of grace only in the heart, but strength of grace.

“No man,” saith our Lord Christ, “puts new wine into old bottles, lest the bottles break and the wine run out.” New wine is strong, and old bottles weak; and the strong wine breaks the weak vessel: this is a reason Christ gives, why his disciples, who were newly converted, and but weak as yet, were not exercised with this austere discipline. But this people here mentioned were a people that fasted often, afflicted their souls much, wore themselves out by frequent practices of humiliation. Sure therefore this was “new wine in new bottles;” this must needs be a people strong in grace; there seems to be grace not only in truth, but also in growth. And yet, for all this, they were no better than a generation of hypocrites; they made a goodly progress, and went far, but yet they went not far enough; they were cast off by God after all.

I hope by this time the truth of the point is sufficiently avouched and confirmed; “that a man may be, yea, very many are, almost, and yet no more than but almost Christians.”

Now for the more distinct prosecution of the point,

1. I shall show you, step by step, how far he may go, to what attainments he may reach, how specious and singular a progress he may make in religion, and yet be but almost a Christian when all is done.

2. I will show whence it is, that many men go so far as that they are almost Christians.

3. Why they are but almost Christians when they have gone thus far.

4. What the reason is, why men that go thus far as to be almost Christians, yet go no farther than to be almost Christians.

QUESTION I.

How far may a man go in the way to heaven, and yet be but almost a Christian?

ANSWER. This I will show you in twenty several steps.

I. A man may have much knowledge, much light; he may know much of God and his will, much of Christ and his ways, and yet be but almost a Christian.

For though there can be no grace without knowledge, yet there may be much knowledge where there is no grace: illumination often goes before, when conversion never follows after. The subject of knowledge is the understanding; the subject of holiness is the will. Now a man may have his understanding enlightened, and yet his will not at all sanctified. He may have an understanding to know God, and yet want a will to obey God. The apostle tells us of some, that, "when they knew God, they glorified him not as God."

To make a man altogether a Christian, there must be light in the head, and heat in the heart; knowledge in the understanding, and zeal in the affections. Some have zeal and no knowledge; that is, blind devotion: some have knowledge and no zeal; that is, fruitless speculation: but where knowledge is joined with zeal, that makes a true Christian.

Objection. But is it not said, “This is life eternal—to know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent?”

Answer. It is not every knowledge of God and Christ, that interests the soul in life eternal. For why then do the devils perish; they have more knowledge of God than all the men in the world; for though, by their fall, they lost their holiness, yet they lost not their knowledge. They are called δαιμονες, from their knowledge, and yet they are διαβολοι, from their malice, devils still.

Knowledge may fill the head, but it will never better the heart, if there be not somewhat else. The Pharisees had much knowledge: “Behold, thou art called a Jew, and retest in the law, and makest thy boast of God, and knowest his will,” &c. and yet they were a generation of hypocrites. Alas! how many have gone loaded with knowledge to hell!

Though it is true, that it is life eternal to know God and Jesus Christ; yet it is as true, that many do know God and Jesus Christ, that shall never see life eternal. There is, you must know, a twofold knowledge; the one is common, but not saving; the other is not common, but saving: common knowledge is that which floats in the head, but does not influence the heart. This knowledge, reprobates may have: “Balaam saw Christ from the top of the rocks, and from the hills.”

Naturalists say, that there is a pearl in the toad’s head, and yet her belly is full of poison. The French have a berry which they call uve de spine, the grape of a thorn. The common knowledge of Christ is the pearl in the toad's head—the grape that grows upon thorns; it may be found in men un-sanctified.

And then there is a saving knowledge of God and Christ, which includes the assent of the mind, and the consent of the will; this is a knowledge that implies faith: “By his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many.” And this is that knowledge which leads to life eternal: now whatever that measure of knowledge is, which a man may have of God, and of Jesus Christ, yet if it be not this saving knowledge—knowledge joined with affection and application—he is but almost a Christian.

He only knows God aright, who knows how to obey him, and obeys according to his knowledge of him: “A good understanding have all they that do his commandments.” All knowledge without this makes a man but like Nebuchadnezzar's image, with “a head of gold, and feet of clay.”

Some know, but to know.

Some know, to be known.

Some know, to practise what they know.

Now to know, but to know—that is curiosity.

To know, to be known—that is vain glory.

But to know, to practise what we know—that is gospel-duty. This makes a man a complete Christian; the other, without this, makes a man almost, and yet but almost a Christian.

II. A man may have great and eminent gifts, yea, spiritual gifts, and yet be but almost a Christian.

The gift of prayer is a spiritual gift. Now this a man may have, and yet be but almost a Christian: for the gift of prayer is one thing; the grace of prayer is another. The gift of preaching and prophesying is a spiritual gift; now this a man may have, and yet be but almost a Christian. Judas was a great preacher; so were they that came to Christ, and said, "Lord, Lord, we have prophesied in thy name, and in thy name have cast out devils," &c.

You must know that it is not gifts, but grace, which makes a Christian: For,

1. Gifts are from a common work of the Spirit. Now a man may partake of all the common gifts of the Spirit, and yet be a reprobate; for therefore they are called common, because they are indifferently dispensed by the Spirit to good and bad; to them that are believers, and to them that are not.

They that have grace, have gifts; and they that have no grace, may have the same gifts; for the Spirit works in both; nay in this sense he that hath no grace, may be under a greater work of the Spirit (quod hoc) as to this thing, than he that hath most grace; a graceless professor may have greater gifts than the most holy believer: he may out-pray, and out-preach, and out-do them; but they in sincerity and integrity out-go him.

2. Gifts are for the use and good of others, they are given in ordinem alium, as the school-men speak, for the profiting and edifying of others: so says the apostle, "they are given to profit withal." Now a man may edify another by his gifts, and yet be unedified himself; he may be profitable to another, and yet unprofitable to himself.

The raven was an unclean bird: God makes use of her to feed Elijah; though she was not good meat, yet it was good meat she brought. A lame man may with his crutch point to thee the right way, and yet not be able to walk in it himself. A crooked taylor may make a suit to fit a straight body, though it fit not him that made it, because of his crookedness. The church (Christ's garden enclosed) may be watered through a wooden gutter; the sun may give light through a dusky window; and the field may be well sowed with a dirty hand.

The efficacy of the word doth not depend upon the authority of him that speaks it, but upon the authority of God that blesses it. So that another may be converted by my preaching, and yet I may be cast away notwithstanding. Balaam makes a clear and rare prophecy of Christ, and yet he hath no benefit by Christ: "There shall come a star out of Jacob, and a sceptre shall rise out of Israel;"—but yet Balaam shall have no benefit by it: "I shall see him, but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh."

God may use a man's gifts to bring another to Christ, when he himself, whose gifts God uses, may be a stranger unto Christ; one man may confirm another in the faith, and yet himself may be a stranger to the faith. Pendleton strengthens and confirms Sanders, in Queen Mary's days, to stand in the truth he had preached, and to seal it with his blood, and yet afterwards plays the apostate himself.

Scultetus tells us of one Johannes Speiserus, a famous preacher of Augsburg in Germany, in the year 1523, who preached the gospel so powerfully that divers common harlots were converted, and became good Christians; and yet himself afterwards turned papist and came to a miserable end. Thus the candle may burn bright to light others in their work, and yet afterwards go out in a stink.

3. It is beyond the power of the greatest gifts to change the heart; a man may preach like an apostle, pray like an angel, and yet may have the heart of a devil. It is grace only that can change the heart; the greatest gifts cannot change it, but the least grace can; gifts may make a man a scholar, but grace makes a man a believer. Now if gifts cannot change the heart, then a man may have the greatest gifts, and yet be but almost a Christian.

4. Many have gone laden with gifts to hell; no doubt Judas had great gifts, for he was a preacher of the gospel; and our Lord Jesus Christ would not set him to work, and not fit him for the work; yet “Judas is gone to his own place:” the Scribes and Pharisees were men of great gifts, and yet, “where is the wise? where is the scribe?”

“The preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness.” Them that perish, who are they? Who! the wise and the learned, both among Jews and Greeks; these are called “them that perish.” A great bishop said, when he saw a poor shepherd weeping over a toad: “The poor illiterate world attain to heaven, while we with all our learning fall into hell.”

There are three things must be done for us, if ever we would avoid perishing.

We must be thoroughly convinced of sin.

We must be really united to Christ.

We must be instated in the covenant of grace.

Now, the greatest gifts cannot stead us in any of these.

They cannot work thorough convictions.

They cannot effect our union.

They cannot bring us into covenant-relation. And consequently, they cannot preserve us from eternally perishing; and if so, then a man may have the greatest gifts, and yet be but almost a Christian.

5. Gifts may decay and perish: they do not lie beyond the reach of corruption; indeed grace shall never perish, but gifts will; grace is incorruptible, though gifts are not; grace is “a spring, whose waters fail not,” but the streams of gifts may be dried up. If grace be corruptible in its own nature, as being but a creature, yet it is incorruptible in regard of its conserver, as being the new creature; he that did create it in us, will conserve it in us; he that did begin it will also finish it.

Gifts have their root in nature, but grace hath its roots in Christ; and therefore though gifts may die and wither, yet grace shall abide for ever. Now if gifts are perishing, then, though he that hath the least grace is a Christian, he that hath the greatest gifts may be but almost a Christian.

Objection. But doth not the Apostle bid us

“covet earnestly the best gifts?” Why must we covet them, and covet them earnestly, if they avail not to salvation?

Answer. Gifts are good, though they are not the best good; they are excellent, but there is somewhat more excellent: so it follows in the same verse, “Yet I show unto you a more excellent way,” and that is the way of grace. One dram of grace is more worth than a talent of gifts: gifts may make us rich towards men, but it is grace that makes us “rich towards God.” Our gifts profit others, but grace profits ourselves; that whereby I profit another is good, but that by which I am profited myself is better.

Now because gifts are good, therefore we ought to covet them; but because they are not the best good, therefore we ought not to rest in them, we must covet gifts for the good of others, that they may be edified; and we must covet grace for the good of our own souls, that they may be saved; for whosoever be bettered by our gifts, yet we shall miscarry without grace.

III. A man may have a high profession of religion, be much in external duties of godliness, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Mark what our Lord tells them, “Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven;” that is, not every one that makes a profession of Christ, shall therefore be owned for a true disciple of Christ. “All are not Israel that are of Israel;” nor are all Christians that make a profession of religion.

What a godly profession had Judas! he followed

Christ, left all for Christ, he preached the gospel of Christ, he cast out devils in the name of Christ, he eat and drank at the table of Christ; and yet Judas was but a hypocrite.

Most professors are like lilies, fair in show, but foul in scent; or like pepper, hot in the mouth, but cold in the stomach. The finest lace may be upon the coarsest cloth.

It is a great deceit to measure the substance of our religion by the bulk of our profession, and to judge of the strength of our graces by the length of our duties. The Scriptures speak of some who having "a form of godliness, yet deny the power thereof." Deny the power; that is, they do not live in the practice of those graces to which they pretend in their duties; he that pretends to godliness by a specious profession, and yet doth not practise godliness by a holy conversation, "he hath a form, but denies the power." Grotius compares such to the ostrich, which hath great wings, but yet flies not. Many have the wings of a fair profession, but yet use them not to mount upward in spiritual affections, and a heavenly conversation.

But to clear the truth of this, that a man may make a high profession of religion, and yet be but almost a Christian, take a fourfold evidence.

1. If a man may profess religion, and yet never have his heart changed, nor his state bettered, then he may be a great professor, and yet be but almost a Christian. But a man may profess religion, and yet never have his heart changed, nor his state renewed. He may be a constant hearer of the word, and yet be a sinner still; he may come often to the Lord's table, and yet go away a sinner as he came; we must not think that duties can confer grace.

Many a soul hath been converted by Christ in an ordinance, but never was any soul converted by an ordinance without Christ. And doth Christ convert all that sit under the ordinances? Surely not; for to some, "the word is a savour of death unto death." And if so, then it is plain, that a man may profess religion, and yet be but almost a Christian.

2. A man may profess religion, and live in a form of godliness in hypocrisy. "Hear ye this, O house of Jacob, which are called by the name of Israel, and are come forth out of the waters of Judah; which swear by the name of the Lord, and make mention of the God of Israel, but not in truth, nor in righteousness." What do you think of these? "They make mention of the name of the Lord, there is their profession but not in truth; nor in righteousness," there is their dissimulation: and indeed there could be no hypocrisy in a religious sense, were it not for a profession of religion; for he that is wicked and carnal, and vile inwardly, and appears to be so outwardly, he is no hypocrite, but is what he appears, and appears what he is. But he that is one thing really, and another thing seemingly, is carnal and unholy, and yet seems to be good and holy, he is a hypocrite.

Thus the Casuists define hypocrisy to be a counterfeiting of holiness; and this fits exactly with the Greek word, which is to counterfeit. And to this purpose, the Hebrews have two words for hypocrites; panim, which signifies faces; and chanepim, which signifies counterfeits; from chanaph, to dissemble: so that he is a hypocrite that dissembles religion, and weareth the face of holiness, and yet is without the grace of holiness. He appears to be in semblance, what he is not in substance; he wears a form of godliness without, only as a cover of a profane heart within. He hath a profession, that he may not be thought wicked; but it is but a profession, and therefore he is wicked. He is the religious hypocrite; religious, because he pretends to it; and yet a hypocrite, because he doth but pretend to it. He is like many men in a consumption, that have fresh looks, and yet rotten lungs: or like an apple that hath a fair skin, but a rotten core. Many appear righteous, who are only righteous in appearance. And if so, then a man may profess religion, and yet be but almost a Christian.

3. Custom and fashion may make a man a professor; as you have many that wear this or that garb, not because it keeps them warmer, or hath any excellency in it more than another, but merely for fashion.

Many must have powdered hair, spotted faces, feathers in their caps, &c. for no other end, but because they would be fools in fashion. So, many profess Christianity—not because the means of grace warm the heart, or that they see any excellencies in the ways of God above the world, but—merely to follow the fashion! I wish I might not say, it hath been true of our days, because religion hath been uppermost, therefore many have professed; it hath been the gaining trade, and then most will be of that trade.

Religion in credit makes many professors, but few proselytes; but when religion suffers, then its confessors are no more than its converts; for custom makes the former, but conscience the latter. He that is a professor of religion merely for custom-sake, when it prospers, will never be a martyr, for Christ's sake, when religion suffers. He that owns the truth, to live upon that, will disown it, when it comes to live upon him.

They say, that when a house is decaying or falling, all the rats and mice will forsake it; while the house is firm, and they may shelter in the roof, they will stay, but no longer; lest, in the decay, the fall should be upon them, and they that lived at top should die at bottom. My brethren, may I not say, we have many that are the vermin, the rats and mice of religion, that would live under the roof of it, while they might have shelter in it; but when it suffers, forsake it, lest it should fall, and the fall should be upon them? I am persuaded this is not the least reason why God hath brought the wheel upon the profession of religion; namely to rid it of the vermin. He shakes the foundations of the house, that these rats and mice may quit the roof; not to overturn it, but to rid them of it; as the husbandman fans the wheat, that he may get rid of the chaff. The halcyon days of the gospel provoke hypocrisy, but the sufferings for religion prove sincerity.

Now, then, if custom and fashion make many men professors, then a man may profess religion, and yet be but almost a Christian.

4. If many may perish under a profession of godliness, then a man may profess religion and yet be but almost a Christian.

Now, the scripture is clear, that a man may perish under the highest profession of religion. Christ cursed the fig-tree, that had leaves and no fruit. It is said, that “the children of the kingdom shall be cast out into outer darkness.” Who were these, but they that were then the only people of God in the world by profession, that had made a “covenant with him by sacrifice”—and yet these were cast out.

In St. Matthew, you read of some that came and made boast of their profession to Christ, hoping that might save them. “Lord,” say they, “have we not prophesied in thy name, cast out devils in thy name, done many wonderful works in thy name?” Now what saith our Lord Christ to this? “Then I will profess unto them, I never knew you; depart from me.”

Mark, here are them that prophesy in his name, and yet perish in his wrath; in his name cast out devils, and then are cast out themselves; in his name do many wonderful works, and yet perish for wicked workers. The profession of religion will no more keep a man from perishing, than calling a ship the Safe-guard, or the Good-speed, will keep her from drowning. As many go to heaven with the fear of hell in their hearts, so many go to hell with the name of Christ in their mouths. Now then, if many may perish under a profession of godliness, then may a man be a high professor of religion, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Objection. But is it not said by the Lord Christ himself, “He that confesses me before men, him will I confess before my Father in heaven?” Now, for Christ to say, he will confess us before the Father, is equivalent to a promise of eternal life: for if Jesus Christ confess us, God the Father will never disown us.

True, they that confess Christ, shall be confessed by him; and it is as true, that this confession is equivalent to a promise of salvation. But now you must know, that professing Christ, is not confessing him; for to profess Christ is one thing—to confess Christ is another. Confession is a living testimony for Christ, in a time when religion suffers; profession may be only a lifeless formality, in a time when religion prospers. To confess Christ, is to choose his ways, and own them. To profess Christ, is to plead for his ways, and yet live beside them. Profession may be from a feigned love to the ways of Christ; but confession is from a rooted love to the person of Christ. To profess Christ, is to own him when none deny him; to confess Christ, is to plead for him, and suffer for him, when others oppose him. Hypocrites may be professors; but the martyrs are the true confessors. Profession is a swimming down the stream. Confession is a swimming against the stream. Now many may swim with the stream, like the dead fish, that cannot swim against the stream, with the living fish. Many may profess Christ, that cannot confess Christ; and so, notwithstanding their profession, yet are but almost Christians.

IV. To come yet nearer; a man may go far in opposing his sin, and yet be but almost a Christian.

How far a man may go in this work, I shall show you in seven gradual instances.

First, A man may be convinced of sin, and yet be but almost a Christian: for,

1. Conviction may be rational, as well as spiritual; it may be from a natural conscience enlightened by the word, without the effectual work of the Spirit, applying sin to the heart.

2. Convictions may be worn out; they many times go off, and end not in sound conversion. Saith the church, "We have been with child, we have been in pain, we have brought forth wind." This is the complaint of the church, in reference to the unprofitableness of their afflictions; and it may be the complaint in most, in reference to the unprofitableness of their convictions.

3. Many take conviction of sin, to be conversion from sin; and to sit down and rest in their convictions. That is a sad complaint God makes of Ephraim: "Ephraim is an unwise son; for he should not stay long in the place of the breaking forth of children." Now then, if convictions may be only from natural conscience; if they may be worn out, or may be mistaken, and rested in for conversion, then a man may have convictions, and be but almost a Christian.

Secondly, A man may mourn for sin, and yet be but almost a Christian. So did Saul; so did

Esau, for the loss of his birthright, which was his sin, and therefore he is called, by the Spirit of God, “profane Esau;” yet, “he sought it again carefully with tears.”

Objection. But doth not Christ pronounce them blessed that mourn? “Blessed are they that mourn.” Sure then, if a man mourn for sin, he is in a good condition: you see, saith Nazienzen, that salvation is joined with sorrow.

Solution. I answer, it is true, that they who mourn for sin, in the sense Christ there speaks of, are blessed; but all mourning for sin, doth not therefore render us blessed.

1. True mourning for sin must flow from spiritual convictions of the evil, and vileness, and damnable nature of sin. Now, all that mourn for sin, do not do it from a thorough work of spiritual conviction upon the soul; they have not a right sense of the evil and vileness of sin.

2. True mourning for sin, is more for the evil that is in sin, than the evil that comes by sin; more because it dishonours God, and wounds Christ, and grieves the Spirit, and makes the soul unlike God, than because it damns the soul. Now there are many that mourn for sin, not so much for the evil that is in it, as for the evil that it brings with it; there is mourning for sin in hell; you read of “weeping and wailing” there. The damned are weeping and mourning to eternity; there, is all sorrow, and no comfort. As in heaven there is peace without trouble, joy without mourning; so in hell there is trouble without peace, mourning without joy, weeping and wailing incessantly: but it is for the evil they feel by sin, and not for the evil that is in sin: so that a man may mourn for sin, and yet be but almost a Christian: it may grieve him to think of perishing for sin, when it does not grieve him that he is defiled and polluted by sin.

Thirdly, A man may make large confession of sin, to God, to others, and yet be but almost a Christian.

How ingenuously doth Saul confess his sin to David? "I have sinned," saith he, "thou art more righteous than I! Behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly." So Judas makes a full confession: "I have sinned in betraying innocent blood." Yet Saul and Judas were both rejected of God; so that a man may confess sin, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Objection. But is not confession of sin a character of a child of God? Doth not the apostle say, "If we confess our sins, God is just and faithful to forgive them:" no man was ever kept out of heaven for his confessed badness, though many are kept out of heaven for their supposed goodness.

Judah, in Hebrew, signifies confession; now Judah got the kingdom from Reuben; confession of sin is the way to the kingdom of heaven.

There are some that confess sin, and are saved; there are others that confess sin, and perish.

1. Many confess sin merely out of custom, and not out of conscience; you shall have many that will never pray, but they will make a long confession of sin, and yet never feel the weight or burden of it upon their consciences.

2. Many will confess lesser sins, and yet conceal greater; like the patient in Plutarch, that complained to his physician of his finger, when his liver was rotten.

3. Many will confess sin in the general, or confess themselves sinners; and yet see little, and say less of their particular sins; an implicit confession, as one saith, is almost as bad as an implicit faith.

Where confession is right, it will be distinct, especially of those sins that were our chief sins. So David confesses his blood-guiltiness and adultery: so Paul his blasphemy, persecution, and injury against the saints. It is bad to hear men confess they are great sinners, and yet cannot confess their sins. Though the least sin be too bad to be committed, yet there is no sin too bad to be confessed.

4. Many will confess sin, but it is only under extremity, that is, not free and voluntary. Pharaoh confesses his sin, but it was when judgment compelled him. "I have sinned against the Lord," saith he; but it was when he had had eight plagues upon him.

5. Many do by their sins as mariners do by their goods, cast them out in a storm, wishing for them again in a calm. Confession should come like water out of a spring, which runs freely; not like water out of a still, which is forced by fire.

6. Many confess their sins, but with no intent to forsake sin; they confess the sins they have committed, but do not leave the sins they have confessed.

Many men use their confession as Lewis the eleventh of France did his crucifix; he would swear an oath, and then kiss it; and swear again, and then kiss it again. So many sin, and then confess they do not well, but yet never strive to do better.

Mr. Torsel tells a story of a minister he knew, that would be often drunk, and when he came into the pulpit, would confess it very lamentingly; and yet no sooner was he out of the pulpit, but he would be drunk again; and this would he do as constantly as men follow their trades.

Now then, if a man may confess sin merely out of custom; if he may confess lesser sins, and yet conceal greater; if he may confess sin only in the general, or only under extremity, or if he may confess sin without any intent to forsake sin, then surely a man may confess sin, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Fourthly, A man may forsake sin, and yet be but almost a Christian; he may leave his lust, and his wicked ways, which he sometimes lived in, and in the judgment of the world become a new man, and yet not be a new creature. Simon Magus, when he hears Philip preaching concerning the kingdom of God, leaves his sorcery and witchcraft, and believes.

Objection. But you will say, this seems contrary to scripture; for he that says, “He that confesseth and forsaketh sin, shall have mercy:” but I confess sin, yea, not only so, but also I forsake sin; sure therefore this mercy is my portion, it belongs to me.

Answer. It is true, that where a soul forsakes sin from a right principle, after a right manner, to a right end; where he forsakes sin as sin, as being contrary to God, and the purity of his nature—this declares that soul to be right with God, and the promise shall be made good to it, “He shall find mercy.”

But now pray mind, there is a forsaking sin that is not right, but unsound.

1. Open sins may be deserted, and yet secret sins may be retained; now this is not a right forsaking; such a soul shall never find mercy. A man may be cured of a wound in his flesh, and yet may die of an imposthume in his bowels.

2. A man may forsake sin, but not as sin; for he that forsakes sin as sin, forsakes all sin. It is impossible for a man to forsake sin as sin, unless he forsakes all that he knows to be sin.

3. A man may let one sin go, to hold another the faster; as a man that goes to sea, would willingly save all his goods; but if the storm arises that he cannot, then he throws some over-board to lighten the vessel, and save the rest. So did they, Acts xxvii. 38. So the sinner chooses to keep all his sins; but if a storm arises in his conscience, why then he will heave one lust over-board, to save the life of another.

4. A man may let all sin go, and yet be a sinner still; for there is the root of all sin in the heart, though the fruit be not seen in the life: the tree lives, though the boughs be lopped off. As a man is a sinner, before ever he acts sin, so (till grace renews him) he is a sinner, though he leaves sin; for there is original sin in him enough to damn and destroy him.

5. Sin may be left, and yet be loved: a man may forsake the life of sin, and yet retain the love of sin:

now, though leaving sin makes him almost a Christian, yet loving sin shows he is but almost a Christian. It is a less evil to do sin, and not love it, than to love sin and not do it; for to do sin may argue only weakness of grace, but to love sin argues strength of lust. "What I hate, that I do." Sin is bad in any part of man, but sin in the affection is worse than sin in the conversation; for sin in the conversation may be only from infirmity, but sin in the affection is the fruit of choice and unregeneracy.

6. All sin may be chained, and yet the heart not changed; and so the nature of the sinner is the same as ever. A dog chained up, is a dog still, as much as if he was let loose to devour.

There may be a cessation of arms between enemies, and yet the quarrel may remain on foot still: there may be a making truce, where there is no making peace.

A sinner may lay the weapons of sin out of his hand, and yet the enmity against God still remain in his heart. There may be a truce—he may not sin against him; but there can be no peace till he be united to him.

Restraining grace holds in the sinner, but it is renewing grace that changes his nature. Now many are held in by grace from being open sinners, that are not renewed by grace, and made true believers.

Now then, if a man may forsake open sins, and retain secret sins; if he may forsake sin, but not as sin; if he may let one sin go, to hold another the faster; if a man may let all sin go, and yet be a sinner still;

if sin may be left, and yet be loved: finally, if all sin may be chained, and yet the heart not changed;— then a man may forsake sin, and yet be but almost a Christian.

V. A man may hate sin, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Absalom hated Amnon's uncleanness with his sister Tamar; yea, his hatred was so great, that he slew him for it; and yet Absalom was but a wicked man.

Objection. But the Scripture makes it a sign of a gracious heart, to hate sin; yea, though a man do, through infirmities, fall into sin, yet if he hates it, this is a proof of grace. Paul proves the sincerity of his heart, and the truth of his grace, by this hatred of sin, though he committed it: "What I hate, that I do." Nay, what is grace but a conformity of the soul to God; to love as God loves, to hate as God hates? Now God hates sin: it is one part of his holiness to hate all sin. And if I hate sin, then am I conformed to God; and if I am conformed to God, then am I altogether a Christian.

Answer. It is true, that there is a hatred of sin, which is a sign of grace, and which flows from a principle of grace, and is grace. As for instance:

To hate sin, as it is an offence to God, a wrong to his majesty; to hate sin, as it is a breach of the command, and so a wicked controlling of God's will, which is the only rule of goodness; to hate sin, as being a disingenuous transgression of that law of love established in the blood and death of Christ, and so, in a degree, a crucifying of Christ afresh.

To hate sin, as being a grieving and quenching the Spirit of God, as all sin in its nature is.—Thus to hate sin, is grace; and thus every true Christian hates sin.

But, though every man that hath grace, hates sin, yet every man that hates sin, hath not grace: for, a man may hate sin from other principles, not as it is a wrong to God, or a wounding Christ, or a grieving the Spirit; for then he would hate all sin; for there is no sin but hath this in the nature of it.

But,

1. A man may hate sin for the shame that attends it, more than for the evil that is in it. Some sinners there are, “who declare their sin as Sodom, and hide it not.” They are set down in the seat of the scornful; “they glory in their shame.” But now others there are who are ashamed of sin, and therefore hate it, not for the sin’s sake, but for the shame’s sake. This made Absalom hate Amnon’s uncleanness, because it brought shame upon him and his sister.

2. A man may hate sin more in others, than in himself: so doth the drunkard—he hates drunkenness in another, and yet practises it himself! the liar hates falsehood in another, but likes it himself. Now he that hates sin from a principle of grace, hates sin most in himself; he hates sin in others, but he loathes most the sins of his own heart.

3. A man may hate one sin as being contrary to another. There is a great contrariety between sin and sin, between lust and lust; it is the excellency of the life of grace, that it is a uniform life; there is no one grace contrary to another. The graces of God's Spirit are different, but not differing. Faith, and love, and holiness, are all one: they consist together at the same time, in the same subject; nay, they cannot be parted. There can be no faith without love, no love without holiness; and so, on the other hand, no holiness without love; no love without faith. So that this makes the life of grace an easy and excellent life; but now the life of sin is a distracting contradictory life, wherein a man is a servant to contrary lusts: the lust of pride and prodigality is contrary to the lust of covetousness, &c. Now, where one lust gets to be the master-lust of the soul, then that works a hatred of its contrary. Where covetousness gets the heart, there the heart hates pride; and where pride gets uppermost in the heart, there the heart hates covetousness. Thus a man may hate sin, not from a principle of grace, but from the contrariety of lust. He does not hate any sin, as it is sin; but he hates it, as being contrary to his beloved sin.

Now then, if a man may hate sin for the shame that attends it; if he may hate sin more in others than himself; if he may hate one sin as being contrary to another;—then he may hate sin, and yet be but almost a Christian.

VI. A man may make great vows and promises—he may have strong purposes and resolutions against sin, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Thus did Saul; he promises and resolves against his sin: “Return my son David,” saith he, “for I will no more do thee harm.” What promises and resolves did Pharaoh make against that sin of detaining God's people?—saith he, “ I will let the people go, that they may do sacrifice to the Lord.” And again, “ I will let ye go, and ye shall stay no longer.” And yet Saul and Pharaoh both perished in their sins. The greatest purposes and promises against sin will not make a man a Christian: for,

1. Purposes and promises against sin, never hurt sin: we say, “ threatened folks live long;” and truly so do threatened sins. It is not new purposes, but a new nature, that must help us against sin: purposes may bring to the birth, but without a new nature, there is no strength to bring forth. The new nature is the best soil for holy purposes to grow in; otherwise, they wither and die, like plants in an improper soil.

2. Troubles and afflictions may provoke us to large purposes and promises against sin for the future. What more common, than to vow, and not to pay? to make vows in the day of trouble, which we make no conscience to pay in the day of grace? Many covenant against sin, when trouble is upon them; and then sin against their covenant, when it is removed from them. It was a brave rule that Pliny, in one of his epistles, gave his friend to live by, “ That we should continue to be such when we are well, as we promise to be when we are sick.” Many are our sick-bed promises, but we are no sooner well, than we grow sick of our promises.

3. Purposes and resolves against sin for the future, may be only a temptation to put off repentance for the present. Satan may put a man on to good purposes, to keep him from present attempts. He knows whatever we purpose, yet the strength of performance is not in ourselves. He knows, that purposes for the future are a putting God off for the present; they are a secret will not, to a present opportunity. That is a notable passage, "Follow me," saith Christ, to the two men. Now see what answers they gave to Christ:—"Suffer me first to go and bury my father," says one. This man purposes to follow Christ, only he would stay to bury his father. Says the other, "Lord, I will follow thee, but let me first go and bid them farewell which are at my house:" I will follow thee, but only I would first go and take my leave of my friends, or set my house in order; and yet we do not find that ever they followed Christ notwithstanding their fair purposes.

4. Nature unsanctified may be so far wrought on, as to make great promises and purposes against sin.

1st, A natural man may have great convictions of sin, from the workings of an enlightened conscience.

2d, He may approve of the law of God.

3d, He may have a desire to be saved.

Now these three together—the workings of conscience; the sight of the goodness of the law; a desire to be saved,—may bring forth in a man great purposes against sin, and yet he may have no heart to perform his own purposes. This was much like the case of them—say they to Moses, "Go thou near, and hear all that the Lord our God shall say: and tell thou it to us, and we will hear it, and do it." This is a fair promise, and so God takes it: "I have heard the words of this people; they have well said all they have spoken." So said, and so done, had been well; but it was better said than done: for though they had a tongue to promise, yet they had no heart to perform; and this God saw: therefore said he, "O that there were such an heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep my commandments always, that it might be well with them!" They promised to fear God, and keep his commandments; but they wanted a new heart to perform what an unsanctified heart had promised. It fares with men in this case, as it did with that son in the gospel, that said, "He would go into the vineyard, but went not."

Now then, if purposes and promises against sin, never hurt sin; if present afflictions may draw out large promises; if they may be the fruit of a temptation—or, if from nature unsanctified; surely then a man may promise and purpose much against sin, and yet be but almost a Christian.

VII. A man may maintain a strife and combat against sin in himself, and yet be but almost a Christian. So did Balaam: when he went to curse the people of God, he had a great strife within himself. "How shall I curse," saith he, "whom God hath not cursed? or how shall I defy whom the Lord hath not defied?" And did not Pilate strive against his sin, when he said to the Jews, "Shall I crucify your king? what evil hath he done. I am innocent of the blood of this just man."

Objection. But you will say, "Is not this an argument of grace, when there is a striving in the soul against sin? for what should oppose sin in the heart but grace? The apostle makes “the lusting of the flesh against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the flesh,” to be an argument of grace in the heart. Now I find this strife in my heart, though the remainders of corruption sometimes break out into actual sins, yet I find a striving in my soul against sin.

Answer. It is true, there is a striving against sin, which is only from grace, and is proper to believers; and there is a striving against sin, which is not from grace, and therefore may be in them that are not believers. There is a strife against sin in one and the same faculty; the will against the will—the affection against the affection; and this is that which the apostle calls “the lusting of the flesh against the Spirit;” that is, the striving of the unregenerate part against the regenerate: and this is ever in the same faculty, and is proper to believers only.

An unbeliever never finds this strife in himself. This strife cannot be in him; it is impossible, as such; that is, while he is on this side a state of grace. But then there is a striving against sin in divers faculties; and this is the strife that is in them that are not believers. There, the strife is between the will and the conscience; conscience enlightened and terrified with the fear of hell and damnation—that is against sin; the will and affection, not being renewed, they are for sin. And this causes great tugging and combats many times in the sinner’s heart. Thus it was with the Scribes and Pharisees. Conscience convinced them of the divinity of Christ, and of the truth of his being the Son of God; and yet a perverse will, and carnal affections, cry out, “Crucify him! Crucify him!”—Conscience pleaded for him. He had a witness in their bosoms; and yet their wills were bent against him: and therefore they are said “to have resisted the Spirit;” namely, the workings and convictions of the Spirit in their consciences. And this is the case of many sinners: when the will and affections are for sin, and plead for it, conscience is against it, and many times frights the soul from the doing of it. And hence men take that which opposes sin in them to be grace, when it is only the work of a natural conscience. They conclude the strife is between grace and sin—the regenerate and unregenerate part; when, alas! it is no other than the contention of a natural conscience against a corrupt will and affections.—And if so, then a man may have great strifes and combats against sin in him; and yet be but almost a Christian.

5. A man may desire grace, and yet be but almost a Christian. So did the five foolish virgins: “Give us of your oil.” What was that but true grace? It was that oil that lighted the wise virgins into the bridegroom’s chamber. They do not only desire to enter in, but they desire oil to light them in. Wicked men may desire heaven—desire a Christ to save them: there is none so wicked upon earth, but desire to be happy in heaven. But now here are they that desire grace as well as glory, and yet these are but almost Christians.

Objection. But is it not commonly taught that desires of grace are grace? nay, doth not our Lord

Christ make it so?—"Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness; for they shall be filled."

Answer. It is true, that there are some desires of grace which are grace: as,

1. When a man desires grace from a right sense of his natural state; when he sees the vileness of sin, and the woful, defiled, and loathsome condition he is in by reason of sin; and therefore desires the grace of Christ to renew and change him,—this is grace. This some make to be the lowest degree of saving faith.

2. When a man joins proportionable endeavours to his desires; doth not only wish for grace, but work for grace; such desires are grace.

3. When a man's desires are constant and incessant, that cease not but in the attainment of their object; such desires are true grace. They are a part of the especial work of the Spirit. They do really partake of the nature of grace; now it is a known maxim, "that which partakes of the nature of the whole, is a part of the whole;" the filings of gold are gold. The sea is not more really water, than the least drop; the flame is not more really fire than the least spark.

But though all true desires of grace, are grace; yet all desires of grace, are not true: for,

1. A man may desire grace, but not for itself, but for somewhat else; not for grace's sake, but for heaven's sake: he doth not desire grace, that his nature may be changed, his heart renewed, the image of God stamped upon him, and his lusts subdued in

him. These are blessed desires, found only in true believers. The true Christian only can desire grace for grace's sake; but the almost Christian may desire grace for heaven's sake.

2. A man may desire grace without proportionable endeavours after grace; many are good at wishing, but bad at working; like him that lay in the grass on a summer's day, crying out, "O that this were to work?" Solomon saith, "The desire of the slothful kills him." How so? "For his hands refuse to labour;" He perisheth in his desires. The believer joins desires and endeavours together: "One thing have I desired of the Lord, and that will I seek after."

3. A man's desires of grace may be unseasonable: thus the foolish virgins desired oil when it was too late. The believer's desires are seasonable; he desires grace in the season of grace, and seeks in a time when it may be found. "The wise man's heart knows both time and judgment." He knows his season, and hath wisdom to improve it. The silly sinner doth all his works out of season; he sends away the seasons of grace, and then desires grace when the season is over. The sinner doth all too late; as Esau desired the blessing when it was too late, and therefore he lost it; whereas, had he come sooner, he had obtained it. Most men are like Epimetheus, wise too late, they come when the market is done; when the shop is closed, then they have their oil to get. When they lie upon their death-beds, then they desire holy hearts.

4. Desires of grace in many are very inconstant and fleeting, like the “ morning dew, that quickly passes away :” or like Jonah’s gourd, that springs up in a night, and withers in a night ; they have no root in the heart, and therefore quickly perish. Now, if a man may desire grace, but not for grace’s sake ; if desires may be without endeavours : if a man may desire grace when it is too late ; if these desires may be but fleeting and inconstant ; then may a man desire grace, and yet be but almost a Christian.

5. A man may tremble at the word of God and yet be but almost a Christian, as Belshazzar did at the hand-writing upon the wall.

Objection. But is not that a note of sincerity and truth of grace, to tremble at the word? Doth not God say, “ To him will I look that is of a poor and contrite spirit, and trembles at my word?”

Answer. There is a two-fold trembling.

1. One is, when the word discovers the guilt of sin, and the wrath of God that belongs to that guilt ; this, where conscience is awake, causes trembling and amazement : thus, when Paul preached of righteousness and judgment, it is said Felix trembled.

2. There is a trembling which arises from a holy dread and reverence of the majesty of God, speaking in his word ; this is only found in true believers, and is that which keeps the soul low in its own eyes. Therefore mark how the words run : “ To him will I look that is of a poor and contrite spirit, and trembles at my word.” God does not make the promise to him that trembles at the word ; for the devils believe and tremble ; the word of God can make the proudest, stoutest sinner in the world to shake and tremble,—but it is “to the poor and contrite spirit that trembles.” Where trembling is the fruit of a spirit broken for sin, and low in its own eyes; there will God look. Now many tremble at the word, but not from poverty of spirit, not from a heart broken for sin, and low in its own eyes; not from a sense of the majesty and holiness of God: and therefore, notwithstanding, they tremble at the word, yet they are but almost Christians.

VII. A man may delight in the word and ordinances of God, and yet be but almost a Christian: “They take delight in approaching to God.” And it is said of that ground, that it “received the word with joy,” and yet it was but “stony ground.”

Objection. But is it not made a character of a godly man, to delight in the word of God? Doth not David say, “He is a blessed man that delights in the law of the Lord?”

Answer. There is a delighting in the word, which flows from grace, and is a proof of blessedness.

1. He that delights in the word, because of its spirituality, he is a Christian indeed; the more spiritual the ordinances are, the more doth a gracious heart delight in them.

2. When the word comes close to the conscience, rips up the heart, and discovers sin, and yet the soul delights in it notwithstanding; this is a sign of grace.

3. When delight arises from that communion that is to be had with God there, this is from a principle of grace in the soul.

But there may be a delight in the word, where there is no grace.

1. There are many who delight in the word because of the eloquence of the preacher: they delight not so much in the truths delivered, as in the dress in which they are delivered. Thus it is said of the prophet Ezekiel, that he was to them “as a very lovely song of one that hath a pleasant voice.”

2. There are very many who delight to hear the word, that yet take no delight to do it: so saith God of them, “They delight to hear my words, but they do them not.”

Now then, if a man may delight in the word more, because of the eloquence of the preacher, than because of the spirituality of the matter; if he may delight to hear the word, and yet not delight to do it,—then he may delight in the word, and yet be but almost a Christian.

VIII. A man may be a member of the church of Christ, he may join himself to the people of God, partake with them in all ordinances, and share of all church privileges, and yet be but almost a Christian.

So the five foolish virgins joined themselves to the wise, and walked together. Many may be members of the church of Christ, and yet not members of Christ, the head of the church. There was a mixed multitude came up with the church of Israel out of Egypt: they joined themselves to the Israelites, owned their God, left their own country, and yet were in heart Egyptians notwithstanding: “All are not Israel, that are of Israel.”

The church in all ages hath had unsound members: Cain had communion with Abel; Ishmael dwelt in the same house with Isaac; Judas was in fellowship with the apostles; and so was Demas with the rest of the disciples. There will be some bran in the finest meal: the drag-net of the Gospel catches bad fish as well as good; the tares and the wheat grow together, and it will be so till the harvest.

God hath a church where there are no members but such as are true members of Christ, but it is in heaven, it is the "church of the first-born;" there are no hypocrites, nor rotten, unsound professors, none but the "spirits of just men made perfect:" all is pure wheat that God layeth up in that garner; there the chaff is separated to unquenchable fire.

But in the church on earth the wheat and the chaff lie in the same heap together; the Samaritans will be near of kin to the Jews when they are in prosperity: so while the church of God flourisheth in the world, many will join to it; they will seem Jews, though they are Samaritans; and seem saints, though yet they are no better than almost Christians.

IX. A man may have great hopes of heaven, great hopes of being saved, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Indeed there is a hope of heaven which is "the anchor of the soul sure and steadfast," it never miscarries, and it is known by four properties.

First, It is a hope that purifies the heart, purges out sin: "He that hath this hope, purifies himself even as God is pure." That soul that truly hopes to enjoy God, truly endeavours to be like God.

Secondly, It is a hope which fills the heart with gladness: "We rejoice in hope of the glory of God."

Thirdly, It is a hope that is founded upon the promise: as there can be no true faith without a promise, so, nor any true hope. Faith applies the promise, and hope expects the fulfilling the promise: faith relies upon the truth of it, and hope waits for the good of it: faith gives interest, hope expects livery and seisin.

Fourthly, It is a hope that is wrought by God himself in the soul; who is therefore called, "the God of hope," as being the Author as well as the Object of hope. Now, he that hath this hope shall never miscarry. This is a right hope; the hope of the true believer: "Christ in you, the hope of glory." But then, as there is a true and sound hope, so there is a false and rotten hope; and this is much more common, as bastard-pearls are more frequently worn than true pearls.

There is nothing more common, than to see men big with groundless hopes of heaven: as,

1. A man may have great hope that hath no grace; you read of the "hope of hypocrites." The performance of duties is a proof of their hope; the foolish virgins would never have done what they did, had they thought they should have been shut out after all. Many professors would not be at such pains in duties as they are, if they did not hope for heaven. Hope is the great motive to action: despair cuts the sinews of all endeavours. That is one reason why the damned in hell cease acting toward an alteration of their state, because despair hath taken hold of them: if there were any hope in hell, they would up and be doing there. So that there may be great hope where there is no grace; experience proves this; formal professors are men of no grace, but yet men of great hopes; nay, many times you shall find that none fear more about their eternal condition, than they that have most cause of hope; and none hope more than they that have most cause of fear. As interest in hope may sometimes be without hope, so hope in God may be without interest.

2. A man may hope in the mercy and goodness, and power of God, without eyeing the promise; and this is the hope of most: God is full of mercy and goodness, and therefore willing to save; and he is infinite in power, and therefore able to save; why therefore should I not rest on him?

Now it is presumption, and therefore sin, to hope in the mercy of God, otherwise than by eyeing the promise; for the promise is the channel of mercy, through which it is conveyed; all the blessedness the saints enjoy in heaven, is no other than what is the fruit of promise relied on, and hoped for here on earth. A man hath no warrant to hope in God, but by virtue of the promise.

3. A man may hope for heaven, and yet not cleanse his heart, nor depart from his secret sins; that hope of salvation that is not accompanied with heart-purification, is a vain hope.

4. A man may hope for heaven, and yet be doing the work of hell; he may hope for salvation, and yet be working out his own damnation, and so perish in his confidences. This is the case of many, like the water-man that looks one way, and rows another; many have their eyes on heaven whose hearts are in the earth; they hope in God, but choose him not for a portion; they hope in God, but do not love him as the best good, and therefore are like to have no portion in him, nor good by him; but are like to perish without him, notwithstanding all their hopes: "What is the hope of the hypocrite, though he hath gained, when God takes away his soul?"

Now then, if a man may have great hope of heaven, that hath no grace; if he may hope in mercy, without eyeing the promise; if he may hope without heart-purifying; if he may hope for heaven, and yet do the work of hell; surely then a man may have great hopes of heaven, and yet be but almost a Christian.

X. A man may be under great and visible changes, and these wrought by the ministry of the word, and yet be but almost a Christian, as Herod was. It is said, "when he heard John Baptist, he did many things, and heard him gladly." Saul was under a great change when he met the Lord's prophets; he turned prophet too. Nay, it is said, verse 9th of that chapter, that "God gave him another heart." Now, was not this a work of grace? and was not Saul here truly converted? One would think he was; but yet indeed he was not. For though it is said, God gave him another heart, yet it is not said, that God gave him a new heart. There is a great difference between another heart, and a new heart; God gave him another heart to fit him for a ruler, but gave him not a new heart to make him a believer; another heart may make another man, but it is a new heart that makes a new man.

Again Simon Magus is a great proof of this truth: he was under a great and visible change; of a sorcerer he was turned to be a believer; he left his witchcrafts and sorceries, and embraced the gospel; was not this a great change? If the drunkard doth but leave his drunkenness, the swearer his oaths, the profane person his profaneness, they think this is a gracious change, and their state is now good. Alas! Simon Magus did not only leave his sins, but had a kind of conversion; for, “ he believed, and was baptized.”

Objection. But is not that man that is changed, a true Christian?

Answer. Not every change makes a man a Christian: indeed there is a change, that whoever is under it is a true Christian.

When a man's heart is so changed, as that it is renewed: when old things “ are done away, and all is become new :” when the new creature is wrought in the soul, when a man is “ turned from darkness to light, from the power of Satan to God;” when the mind is enlightened, the will renewed, the affections made heavenly; then a man is a Christian indeed.

But now you must know that every change is not this change. For,

1. There is a civil change, a moral change, as well as a spiritual and supernatural change.

Many men are changed in a moral sense, and one may say, they are become new men; but they are in heart and nature the same men still. They are not changed in a spiritual and supernatural sense, and therefore it cannot be said of them, they are become new creatures.

Restraining grace may cause a moral change; but it is renewing grace that must cause a saving change. Now, many are under restraining grace, and so changed morally, that are not under the power of saving grace, and so changed savingly.

2. There is an outward change, as well as an inward change: the outward change is often without the inward, though the inward change is never without the outward. A man's heart cannot be sanctified, but it will influence the life; but a man's life may be reformed, and yet never affect or influence the heart.

3. A man may be converted from a course of profaneness, to a form of godliness; from a filthy conversation, to a fair profession; and yet the heart be the same in one and the other. A rotten post may be gilt without, and yet unsound within. It is common to have the "outside of the cup and platter" made clean, and yet the inside foul and filthy.

Now then, if a man may be changed morally, and yet not spiritually—outwardly, and yet not inwardly, from a course of profaneness, to a lifeless form of godliness; then a man may be under great and visible changes, and yet be no more than almost a Christian.

I do not speak this to discountenance any change, short of that which is spiritual; but to awaken you to seek after that change which is more than moral. It is good to be outwardly renewed, but it is better to be savingly renewed. I know how natural it is for men to take up with any thing like a work of conversion, though it be not conversion; and resting in that, they eternally perish.

Beloved, let me tell you, there is no change, no conversion, can stead your souls in the day of judgment, on this side that saving work, which is wrought on the soul by the Spirit of God, renewing you throughout: the sober man, without this change, shall as surely go to hell, as the foolish drunkard. Morality and civility may commend us to men, but not to God. They are of no value in the procurement of an eternal salvation.

A man may go far in an outward change, and yet be not one step nearer heaven, than he that was never under any change;—nay, he may be, in some sense, further off; as Christ saith, the Scribes and Pharisees were further from heaven, with all their show of godliness, than publicans and harlots, in all their sin and uncleanness. Because, resting in a false work, a partial change, we neglect to seek after a true and saving change. There is nothing more common than to mistake our state, and by overweening thoughts, misjudge our condition, and so perish in our own delusions. The world is full of these foolish builders, that lay the foundation of their hopes of eternal salvation upon the sand.

Now, my brethren, would you not mistake the way to heaven, and perish in a delusion? Would you not be found fools at last? for none are such fools as the spiritual fool, who is a fool in the great business of salvation. Would you not be fools for your souls, and for eternity? O then labour after, and pray for, a thorough work of conversion! Beg of God that he would make a saving change in your souls, that ye may be altogether Christians! All other changes below this saving change, this heart-change, make us but almost Christians.

XI. A man may be very zealous in the matters of religion, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Jehu did not only serve God, and do what he commanded him, but was very zealous in his service: “Come with me, and see my zeal for the Lord of hosts!” and yet in all this Jehu was a very hypocrite. Joash was a great reformer in Jehoiada’s time; it is said, “He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, all the days of Jehoiada the priest.” But when Jehoiada died, Joash’s zeal for God died with him, and he becomes a very wretch.

Objection. But the apostle makes zeal to be a note of sound Christianity: “It is good to be zealously affected in good things;” nay, it seems to be the non-such qualification for obtaining eternal life: “The kingdom of heaven suffereth violence, and the violent take it by force.”

Answer. It is true, there is a zeal which is good, and which renders the soul highly acceptable to God—a zeal, that never misses of heaven and salvation. Now this is a zeal which is a celestial fire; the true temper and heat of all the affections to God and Christ. It is a zeal wrought and kindled in the soul by the Spirit of God, who first works it, and then sets it on work. It is a zeal that hath the word of God for its guide, directing it in working, both in regard of its object and end, manner and measure. It is a zeal that checks sin, and forwards the heavenly life. It is a zeal that makes the glory of God its chief end; which swallows up all by-ends: "The zeal of thy house hath eaten me up."

But now all zeal is not this kind of zeal: there is a false zeal, as well as a true: every grace hath its counterfeit. As there is fire, which is true heavenly fire, on the altar, so there is strange fire: Nadab and Abihu offered strange fire upon God's altar.

There are several kinds of zeal, none of which are true and sound, but false and counterfeit.

I shall instance in eight particulars:

First, There is a blind zeal, a zeal without knowledge. "They have a zeal," saith the apostle, "but not according to knowledge." Now as knowledge, without zeal is fruitless, so zeal without knowledge is dangerous. It is like wild-fire in the hand of a fool; or, like the devil in the man possessed, that threw him sometimes into the fire, sometimes into the water.

The eye is the light of the body, and the understanding is the light of the soul. Now, as the body, without the light of the eye, cannot go without stumbling; so the soul, without the light of the mind, cannot act without erring. Zeal without knowledge, is like an ignis fatuus in a dark night, that leads a traveller out of his way, into the bogs and mire. This was the zeal of Paul, while he was a Pharisee: "I was zealous towards God, as ye are all this day; and I persecuted this way unto the death." And again, "I verily thought with myself, I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth." And, "Concerning zeal, persecuting the church." Such a zeal was that in John, "They shall put you out of the synagogue,"—silence you, you shall not be suffered to preach;—"yea, the time comes, that whoever kills you, will think that he doth God service." This is great zeal, but yet it is blind zeal; and that God abhors.

Secondly, There is a partial zeal: in one thing, fire-hot—in another key-cold; zealous in this thing, and yet careless in another. Many are first-table Christians, zealous in the duties of the first table, and yet neglect the second. Thus the Pharisees were zealous in their Corban, and yet unnatural to their parents, suffering them to starve and perish. Others are second-table Christians, zealous in the duties of the second table, but neglect the first; more for righteousness among men, than for holiness towards God. But now he whose religion ends with the first table, or begins with the second, he is a fool in his profession; for he is but almost a Christian.

The woman that was for the dividing the child, was not the true mother; and he that is for dividing the commands, is not a true believer.

Jehu was zealous against Ahab's house, but not so against Jeroboam's calves; many are zealous against sin of opinion, that yet use no zeal against the sins of their conversation.

Now, as we know that the sweat of the whole body is a sign of health, but the sweat of some one part only, shows a distemper, and therefore physicians do reckon such a heat to be symptomatical. So where zeal reaches to every command of God alike, that is a sign of a sound constitution of soul; but where it is partial, where a man is hot in one part, and cold in another, that is symptomatical of some inward spiritual distemper.

Thirdly, There is a misplaced zeal; fixed upon unsuitable and disproportionable objects. Many are very zealous in trifling things that are not worth it, and trifling in the things that most require it; like the Pharisees that were diligent tythers of mint, anise, and cummin, but neglected the "weightier matters of the law; judgment, mercy, and faith." They had no zeal for these, though very hot for the other; many are more zealous for a ceremony, than for the substance of religion; more zealous for bowing at the name of Jesus, than for conformity to the life of Jesus; more zealous for a holy vestment, than for a holy life; more zealous for the inventions of men, than for the institutions of Christ. This is a superstitious zeal, and usually found in men unconverted, in whom grace never was wrought. Against such men heathens will rise up in judgment. When was it that Paul was so "exceeding zealous of the traditions of his fathers," as he saith, but only when he was in his wretched and unconverted state? as you may see in the next verses :

“ But when it pleased God to call me by his grace, then I conferred not with flesh and blood.” Paul had another kind of zeal then, actuated by other kind of principles.

Fourthly, There is a selfish zeal, that hath a man’s own end for its motive; Jehu was very zealous, but it was not so much for God, as for the kingdom; not so much in obedience to the command, as in design to step into the throne; and therefore God threatens to punish him for that very thing he commands him to do: “ I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu:” because he shed that blood, to gratify his lust, not to obey God. So Simeon and Levi pretend great zeal for circumcision, seem very zealous for the honour of God’s ordinances, when in truth their zeal was covetousness, and revenge upon the Shechemites.

Fifthly, There is an outside zeal: such was that of the Scribes and Pharisees; they would not eat with unwashed hands, but yet would live in unseen sins; they would wash the cup often, but the heart seldom; paint the outside, but neglect the inside. Jehu was a mighty outside reformer, but he reformed nothing within, for he had a base heart under all. “ Jehu took no heed to walk in the law of the Lord with all his heart.” Though his fleece was fair, his liver was rotten. Our Lord Christ observes of the Pharisees, “ They pray, to be seen of men;” and fast, so “ that they may appear to men to fast.”

Sixthly, There is a forensic zeal, that runs out upon others; like the candle in the lantern, that sends all the heat out at the top; or as the lewd woman Solomon mentions, whose “feet abide not in her own house.”

Many are hot and high against the sins of others, and yet cannot see the same in themselves; like the Lamiæ, that put on their spectacles when they went abroad, but pulled them off within doors.

It is easy to see faults in others, and as hard to see them in ourselves. Jehu was zealous against Baal and his priests, because that was Ahab's sin; but not against the calves of Bethel, because that was his own sin. This zeal is the true character of a hypocrite; his own garden is overrun with weeds, while he is busy in looking over his neighbour's pale.

Seventhly, There is a sinful zeal: all the former may be called sinful from some defect; but this I call sinful in a more special notion, because against the life and chief of religion. It is a zeal, against zeal, that flies not at profaneness, but at the very power of godliness; not at error, but at truth; and is most hot against the most spiritual and important truths of the times. Whence else are the sufferings of men for the truth, but from the spirit of zeal against the truth? This may be called a devilish zeal; for as there is the faith of devils, so there is the zeal of devils: “Therefore his rage is great, because he knows his time is short.”

Eighthly, There is a scriptureless zeal, that is not butted and bounded by the word, but by some base and low end. Such was Saul's zeal, when God bids him destroy Amalek, “and spare neither man nor beast;" when contrary to God's command, he spares the best of the sheep and oxen, under pretence of zeal for God's sacrifice. Another time, when he had no such command, then he slew the Gibeonites "in zeal to the children of Israel and Judah."

Many a man's zeal is greater then and there, when and where he hath the least warrant from God. The true spirit of zeal is bounded by Scripture; for it is for God, and the concerns of his glory: God hath no glory from that zeal that hath no scripture-warrant.

Now then, if the zeal of a man in the things of God may be only a blind zeal, or a partial zeal, or a misplaced zeal, or a selfish zeal, or an outside zeal, or a forensic zeal, or a sinful zeal, or a scriptureless zeal; then it is evident, that a man may be very zealous in the matters of religion, and yet be but almost a Christian.

XII. A man may be much in prayer—he may pray often, and pray much; and yet be but almost a Christian. So did the Pharisees, whom yet our Lord Christ rejects for hypocrites.

Objection. But is not a praying-frame an argument of a sincere heart? Are not the saints of God called "the generation of them that seek the face of God?"

Answer. A man is not therefore a Christian, because he is much in prayer. I grant that those prayers that are from the workings and sighings of God's Spirit in us; from sincere hearts lifted up to God; from a sense of our own emptiness, and God's infinite fulness; that are suited to God's will, the great rule of prayer; that are for spiritual things, more than temporal; that are accompanied with faith and dependance,—such prayers speak a man altogether a Christian. But now a man may be much in prayer, and yet be a stranger to such prayer; as,

1. Nature may put a man upon prayer; for it is a part of natural worship. It may put a child of God upon prayer;—so did Christ: “He went and fell on his face, and prayed, saying, O my Father! if it be possible, let this cup pass from me.” This was a prayer of Christ which flowed from the sinless strugglings of nature, seeking its own preservation.

2. A man may pray in pretence, for a covering to some sin; so did those devout Pharisees: “Wo to you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites! for ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers: therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation.” So the Papists seem very devout to pray a rich man's soul out of purgatory; but it is to cheat the heir of much of his estate, under pretence of praying for his father's soul.

3. A man may pray, and yet love sin; as Austin before conversion prayed against his sin, but was afraid God should hear him, and take him at his word. Now, God hears not such prayers: “If I regard iniquity in my heart, God will not hear my prayer.”

4. A man may pray much for temporal things, and little for spiritual things; and such are the prayers of most men, crying out most for temporal things. More for, “Who will show us any good?”

than for, "Lord, lift upon us the light of thy countenance." David copies out the prayer of such: "That our sons may be as plants, and that our daughters may be as corner-stones, polished after the similitude of a palace: that our garners may be full, &c. Happy is the people that is in such a case!" This is the carnal prayer; and this David calls vanity—"They are strange children, whose mouth speaketh vanity."

5. A man may pray, and yet be far from God in prayer: "This people draw nigh to me with their mouths, and honour me with their lips, but their heart is far from me." A man may pray, and yet have no heart in prayer; and that God chiefly looks at: "My son, give me thy heart."

The Jews have this sentence written upon the walls of their synagogues: "Prayer, without the intention of the mind, is but a body without a soul."

It is not enough to be conscionable to use prayer, but we must be conscionable to the use of prayer. Many are so conscientious that they dare not but pray; and yet so irreligious, that they have no heart in prayer. A common work of God may make a man conscionable to do duties, but nothing less than giving grace in the heart, will make a man conscionable in the doing of them.

6. A man's prayer may be a lie. As a profession without sanctity is a lie to the world, so prayer without sincerity, is a lie to God. It is said of Israel, that they "sought God, and inquired early after him." They were much in prayer, and God calls all but a lie. "Nevertheless, they did flatter him with their mouths, and they lied to him with their tongues, for their heart was not with him.”—“Hearken to my prayer, that goeth not out of feigned lips,” saith David.

7. Affliction and the pressure of outward evils, will make a man pray, and pray much. “When he slew them, then they sought him, and returned, and inquired early after God.” The heathen mariners called every man upon his God when in a storm: when they fear drowning, then they fall to praying, Jonah i. 5. Mariners are for the most part none of the devoutest, nor much addicted to prayer. They will swear twice, where they pray once; and yet it is said, “They cry to the Lord in their trouble:” and hence you have a proverb, “He that cannot pray, let him go to sea.”—“They poured out a prayer when thy chastening was upon them.”

Now then, if nature may put a man upon prayer; if a man may pray in pretence, and design; if a man may pray, and yet love sin; if a man may pray mostly for temporal things; if a man may pray, and yet be far from God in prayer; if prayer may be a lie, or it may be only the cry of the soul under affliction,—sure then a man may be much in prayer, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Objection. But suppose a man pray, and prevail with God in prayer, surely that is a witness from heaven of a man’s sincerity in prayer: now, I pray, and prevail; I ask, and am answered.

Answer. A man may pray, and be answered; for God many times answers prayers in judgment. As God is sometimes silent in mercy, so he speaks in wrath; and as he sometimes denies prayer in mercy, so he sometimes answers in judgment: when men are over-importunate in something their lusts are upon, and will take no nay, then God answers in judgment. “He gave them their own desire.” They had desired quails, and God sent them: but now mark the judgment—“While the meat was in their mouths, the wrath of God came upon them, and slew them.”

Objection. But suppose a man’s affections are much stirred in prayer—how then? Is not that a true note of Christianity? Now my affections are much stirred in prayer.

Answer. So was Esau’s, when he sought the blessing. “He sought it carefully with tears.” A man may be affected with his own parts in a duty, while good notions pass through his head, and good words through his lips: some good motions also may stir in his heart, but they are but sparks which fly out at the tunnel of the chimney, which suddenly vanish; so that it is possible a man may pray, and prevail in prayer; pray, and be affected in prayer—and yet be but almost a Christian.

XIII. A man may suffer for Christ in his goods, in his name, in his person; and yet be but almost a Christian.

Every man that bears Christ’s cross on his shoulders, doth not, therefore, bear Christ’s image in his soul.

Objection. But doth not our Lord Christ make great promises to them that suffer, or lose any thing for him? Doth he not say, “Every one that hath forsaken houses, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, shall receive an hundred fold, and shall inherit everlasting life?" Sure they are true Christians to whom Christ makes this promise!

Answer. There is a suffering for Christ, that is a note of sincerity, and shall have its reward. That is, when a man suffers for a good cause, upon a good call, and with a good conscience, for Christ's sake, and in Christ's strength; when his sufferings are a filling up "that which is behind of the sufferings of Christ;" when a man suffers as a Christian, as the apostle hath it, "If a man suffers as a Christian, let him not be ashamed;" when a man thrusts not himself into sufferings, but stays God's call, such suffering is a proof of integrity.

But now, every suffering for Christ is not suffering as a Christian: for,

1. A man may suffer for Christ, for that profession of religion that is upon him: the world hates the show of religion. Times may come, that it may cost a man as dear to wear the livery of Christ, as to wear Christ himself. Alexander had like to have lost his life for the gospel's sake, yet he was that Alexander, as is generally judged, that afterwards made shipwreck of faith, and greatly opposed Paul's ministry.

2. A man may suffer for Christ, and yet have no true love to Christ. This is supposed: "Though I give my body to be burned, and have not charity, it profits nothing."

Love to Christ is the only noble ground of suffering; but a man may suffer much upon other ends.

1. Out of opinion of meriting by our sufferings, as the Papists; or,

2. Out of vain glory, or for applause among professors: some have died, that their names might live; or,

3. Out of a Roman resolution, or stoutness of spirit.

4. Out of a design of profit, as Judas forsook all for Christ, hoping to mend his market by closing with him; or,

5. Rather to maintain an opinion, than for truth's propagation. Socrates died for maintaining that there was but one God; but whether he died rather for his own opinion, than for God's sake, I think it is no hard matter to determine. Thus, a man may suffer for professing Christ, and yet suffer upon wrong principles.

Now then, if a man may suffer for Christ, from the profession that is upon him, or suffer for Christ, and yet not truly love him; then a man may suffer for Christ, and yet be but almost a Christian.

XIV. A man may be called of God, and embrace this call, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Judas is a famous instance of this truth: he was called by Christ himself, and came at the call of Christ; and yet Judas was but almost a Christian.

Objection. But is not the being under the call of God, a proof of our interest in the predestinating love of God? Doth not the apostle say, "Whom he predestinated, them he called?" Nay, doth he not say, in the next verse, "Whom he called, them he justified?" Nay, doth not God call all whom he intends to save?

Answer. Though God calleth all those that shall be saved, yet all shall not be saved whom God calleth. Every man under the gospel is called of God in one sense or other, but yet every man under the gospel shall not therefore be saved: “For many are called, but few chosen.”

There is a twofold call of God—internal, and external.

1. There is an internal call of God. Now, this call is a special work of the Spirit, by the ministry of the word, whereby a man is brought out of a state of nature, into a state of grace; “out of darkness into light, from being vessels of wrath, to be made heirs of life.” I grant, that whoever is under this call of God, is called effectually and savingly, to be a Christian indeed. “Every man that hath heard and learned of the Father, comes to me.”

2. There is a call of God which a man may have, and yet not be this call: there is an external call of God, which is by the ministry of the word.

Now every man that lives under the preaching of the gospel, is thus called. God calls every soul of you to repent, and lay a sure foundation for heaven and salvation, by the word you hear this day.

But now every man that is thus called, is not therefore a Christian: for,

1. Many under the call of God, come to Christ, but are not converted to Christ, have nothing of the grace and life of Christ; such as he, who, when Christ sent out his servants to bid guests unto the marriage, came in at the call of Christ, but yet “had not on the wedding garment;” that is, had none of the grace and righteousness of Jesus Christ.

2. Many that are under the call of the gospel, come to Christ, and yet afterwards fall away from Christ; as Judas and Demas did. It is said, when Christ preached a doctrine that his disciples did not like, that “from that time many of his disciples went back, and walked no more with him.”

Now then, if many are only under this external call of God; if many that come to Christ are not converted to Christ, but fall away from Christ; then a man may be called of God, and yet be but almost a Christian.

XV. A man may have the Spirit of God, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Balaam had the Spirit of God given him when he blessed Israel: “Balaam saw Israel abiding in tents, and the Spirit of the Lord came upon him.” Judas had; for by the Spirit he cast out devils; he was one of them that came to Christ, and said, “Lord, even the devils are subject to us.” Saul had—“Behold, a company of prophets met him; and the Spirit of God came upon him, and he prophesied among them.”

Objection. But you will say, “Can a man have the Spirit of God, and yet not be a Christian?” Indeed, the Scripture saith, “If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his;” but surely if any man have the Spirit of Christ, he is his!

Answer. There is a having the Spirit, which is a sure mark of saintship. Where the Spirit is an effectual prevailing principle of grace and sanctification, renewing and regenerating the heart: where the Spirit is a potent worker, “helping the soul’s infirmities: where the Spirit is so as to “abide for ever.” But now every man that hath the Spirit, hath not the Spirit in this manner: for,

1. A man may have the Spirit only transiently, not abidingly. The Spirit may be in a man, and yet not dwell in a man; the Spirit is wherever he dwells, but he does not dwell wherever he is; he is in all, but dwells in saints only. The hypocrite may have the Spirit for a season, but not to abide in him for ever.

2. A man may have the Spirit, and yet not be born of the Spirit. Every true Christian is born of the Spirit. A hypocrite may have the gifts of the Spirit, but not the graces: the Spirit may be in him by the way of illumination, but not by way of sanctification; by way of conviction, but not by way of conversion. Though he may have much common grace for the good of others, yet he may have no special grace for the good of himself; though his profession be spiritual, yet his state and condition may be carnal.

3. A man may have the Spirit only as a Spirit of bondage. Thus, many have the Spirit working only to bondage. “The Spirit of bondage is an operation of the Holy Ghost by the law, convincing the conscience of sin, and of the curse of the law, and working in the soul such an apprehension of the wrath of God, as makes the thoughts of God a terror to him.”

This Spirit may be, and often is, without saving grace: this operation of the Spirit was in Cain and Judas. There are none that receive the Spirit of adoption, but they first receive the Spirit of bondage; yet many receive the Spirit of bondage, that never receive the Spirit of adoption.

4. A man may have the Spirit of God working in him, and yet it may be resisted by him. It is said of the Jews, "They rebelled, and vexed his holy Spirit:" and the same sin is charged upon their children: "Ye stiff-necked, and uncircumcised in heart, ye have always resisted the Holy Ghost; as your fathers did, so do ye." The hypocrite retains not the Spirit so long as to come up to regeneration and adoption, but quenches the motion of it, and thereby miscarries eternally.

5. A man may have the Spirit, and yet sin that unpardonable sin: he may have the Holy Ghost, and yet sin the sin against the Holy Ghost;—nay, no man can sin this sin against it, but he that hath some degree of it.

The true believer hath so much of the Spirit, such a work of it in him, that he cannot sin that sin: "He that is born of God, sins not;" to wit, that "sin unto death," for that is meant. The carnal professing sinner, he cannot sin that sin, because he is carnal and sensual, having not the Spirit. A man must have some measure of the Spirit that sins this sin: so hath the hypocrite: he is said to be "partaker of the Holy Ghost," and he only is capable of sinning the sin against the Holy Ghost.

Now then, if a man may have the Spirit transiently only, not abidingly; if a man may have the Spirit, and yet not be born of the Spirit; if he may have the Spirit only as a Spirit of bondage; if a man may have the Spirit working in him, and yet it may be resisted by him; if a man may have the Spirit, and yet sin that unpardonable sin against it; then surely a man may have the Spirit of God, and yet be but almost a Christian.

XVI. A man may have faith, and yet be but almost a Christian.

The stony ground, that is, those hearers set out by the stony ground, “for a while believed.” It is said, that many believed in the name of Christ, yet Christ durst not “commit himself to them.” Though they trusted in Christ, yet Christ would not trust them; and why? “because he knew all men.” He knew they were rotten at root, notwithstanding their faith. A man may have all faith, to the removing of mountains, and yet be nothing.

Objection. But how can this be, that a man may have faith, and yet be but almost a Christian? Doth not our Lord Christ promise life eternal and salvation to all that believe? Is not this the Gospel that is to be preached to every creature, “He that believes shall be saved?”

Answer. Though it is true what our Lord Christ saith, that “he that believes shall be saved,” yet it is as true, that many believe that shall never be saved; for Simon Magus believed; yea, James saith, “The devils believe and tremble:” now none will say these shall be saved. As it is true, what the Apostle saith, “All men have not faith,” so it is as true, that there are some men have faith, who are no whit the better for their faith.

You must know therefore there is a two-fold faith,

1. Special and saving.
2. Common and not saving.
1. There is a saving faith.

This is called "faith of the operation of God." It is a work of God's own Spirit in the soul. It is such a faith as rests and casts the soul wholly upon Christ for grace and glory, pardon and peace, sanctification and salvation. It is a united act of the whole soul, understanding, will and affections, all concurring to unite the soul to an all-sufficient Redeemer. It is such a faith as "purifies the heart," and makes it clean; it influences and gives strength and life to all other graces. Now, whoever hath this faith, is a Christian indeed; this is the "faith of God's elect." But then,

2. There is a common faith, not saving, a fading and temporary faith; there is the faith of Simon Magus, as well as the faith of Simon Peter: Simon Magus believed, and yet he was in the "gall of bitterness, and in the bond of iniquity." Now Simon Magus hath more followers than Simon Peter: the faith of most men will at last be found to be no better than the faith of Simon Magus: for,

First, The faith of most is but a temporary faith, endures for a while, and then dies and perisheth; true and saving faith, such as is the faith of God's elect, cannot die: it may fail in the act, but not in the habit; the sap may not be in the branch, but it is always in the root.

That faith that perisheth, that faith a man may have and perish.

Secondly, There is a faith that lies only in generals, not in particulars: as there is a general and particular object of faith, so there is a general and particular faith. The general object of faith is the whole scripture; the particular object of faith is Christ in the promise. Now many have a general faith to believe all the scripture, and yet have no faith to make particular application of Jesus Christ in the promise. Devils and reprobates may believe the truth of the scripture, and what is written of the dying and suffering of Christ for sinners; but there are but few that can close up themselves in the wounds of Christ, and by his stripes fetch in healing to their own souls.

Thirdly, There is a faith that is seated in the understanding, but not in the will; this is a very common faith; many assent to the truth. They believe all the attributes of God, that he is just, holy, wise, faithful, good, merciful, &c. But yet they rest not on him notwithstanding. They believe the commands are true, but yet do not obey them: they believe the promises are true, but yet do not embrace and apply them: they believe the threatenings are true, but yet do not flee from them.

Thus their faith lies in assent, but not consent; they have faith to confess a judgment, but none to take out execution: by assent they lay a foundation, but never build upon it by application. They believe that Christ died to save them that believe, and yet they believe not in Christ, that they may be saved.

O my brethren, it is not a believing head, but a believing heart that makes a Christian; "with the heart man believes to righteousness:" without this our "faith is in vain, we are yet in our sins."

Fourthly, There is a faith without experience; many believe the word upon hearsay, to be the word of God; but they never felt the power and virtue of it upon their hearts and consciences. Now what good is it to believe the truth of the word, if a man's conscience never felt the power of the word? what is it to believe the truth of the promise, if we never tasted the sweetness of the promise? We are in this case like a man that believes the description others make of strange countries, but never travelled them to know the truth: or as a patient that believes all the physician says, but yet tries none of his potions. We believe the word, because we cannot gainsay it; but yet we have no experience of any saving good wrought by the word, and so are but almost Christians.

Fifthly, There is a faith that is without brokenness of heart, that does not avail to melt or soften the heart, and therefore is not true faith; for the least true faith is ever joined with a bending will, and broken heart.

Sixthly, There is a faith that transforms not the heart; faith without fruit, that doth not bring forth the new creature in the soul, but leaves it in a state of sin and death. This is a faith that makes a man a sound professor, but not a sound believer; he be-believes the truth, but not as it is in Jesus; for then it would change and transform him into the likeness of Jesus. He believes that a man must be changed that would be saved, but yet is not savingly changed by believing. Thus, while others believe to salvation, he believes to damnation: for "his web shall not become a garment; neither shall he cover himself with his work."

Now then, if a man's faith may be but temporary, or may lie only in generals, or may be seated in the understanding only, or may be without experience, or may be without a broken heart, or without a new heart; surely then a man may have faith, he may taste of this "heavenly gift," and yet be but almost a Christian.

XVII. A man may go further yet: he may possibly have a love to the people of God, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Every kind of love to those who are saints, is not a proof of our saintship. Pharaoh loved Joseph, and advanced him to the second place in the kingdom, and yet Pharaoh was but a wicked man: Ahab loved Jehoshaphat and made a league with him, and married his daughter Athaliah to Jehoram, Jehoshaphat's son, and yet Ahab was a wicked wretch.

But you will say this seems to contradict the testimony of the Scriptures; for that makes love to the saints and people of God, a sure proof of our regeneration, and interest in life eternal: "We know that we have passed from death to life, because we love the brethren." Nay, the Spirit of God put-teth this as a characteristical distinction between saints and sinners: "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil: whosoever doth not righteousness, is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." By brethren we do not understand brethren by place, those who are of the same country or nation, such as are called brethren in Rom. ix. 3. Acts vii. 23, 25. Nor do we understand brethren by race, those who are descended of the same parents; such are called brethren in James i. 2. But by brethren we understand brethren by grace, and supernatural regeneration, such as are the children of God; and these are the brethren whom to love is a sure sign that we are the children of God.

Answer. To this I answer, that there is a love to the children of God, which is a proof of our being the children of God. As for instance, when we love them as such, for that very reason, as being the saints of God, when we love them for the image of God, which appeareth in them, because of that grace and holiness which shineth forth in their conversations; this is truly commendable, to love the godly for godliness sake, the saints for saintship sake, this is a sure testimony of our Christianity. The love of grace in another, is a good proof of the life of grace in ourselves. There can be no better evidence of the Spirit of Christ in us, than to love the image of Christ in others. For this is a certain truth, that a sinner cannot love a saint as such; "an Israelite is an abomination to an Egyptian."

There is a contrariety and natural enmity between the two seeds; between the children of the world, and those whom the father in his eternal love hath “chosen out of the world.”

It is likeness which is the great ground of love; now there is the highest dissimilitude and unlikeness between an unregenerate sinner, and a child of God, and therefore a child of God cannot love a sinner as a sinner: “In whose eyes a vile person is contemned.” He may love him as a creature; he may love his soul, or he may love him under some relation that he stands in to him. Thus God loves the damned spirits, as they are his creatures, but as fallen angels he hateth them with an infinite hatred. So to love a sinner, quatenus a sinner, this a child of God cannot do; so neither can a sinner love a child of God as a child of God. That he may love a child of God, that I grant, but it is upon some other consideration; he may love a person that is holy, not the person for his holiness, but for some other respect. As,

1. A man may love a child of God for his loving, peaceable, courteous deportment to all with whom he converseth. Religion beautifies the conversation of a man, and sets him off to the eye of the world. The grace of God is no friend to morose, churlish, unmannerly behaviour among men; it promotes an affable demeanour and sweetness to all; and where this is found, it winneth respect and love from all.

2. A man may love a saint for his outward greatness and splendour in the world: men are very apt to honour worldly greatness, and therefore the rich saint shall be loved and honoured, whilst the poor saint is hated and despised. This is as if a man should value the goodness of his sword by the embroidery of his belt; or his horse for the beauty of his trappings, rather than for his strength and swiftness.

True love to the children of God, reaches to all the children of God, poor as well as rich, bound as well as free, ignoble as well as noble, for the image of Christ is alike amiable and lovely in all.

3. A man may love a child of God for his fidelity and usefulness in his place: where religion in the power of it taketh hold of a man's heart, it makes him true to all his trusts, diligent in his business, faithful in all his relations; and this obligeth respect. A carnal master may prize a godly apprentice or servant that makes conscience of pleasing his master, and is diligent in promoting his interest.

I might instance in many things of the like nature, as charity, beauty, wit, learning, parts, &c. which may procure love to the people of God from the men of the world. But this love is no proof of charity: For,

First, It is but a natural love arising from some carnal respect, or self-ends: that love which is made by the scripture an evidence of our regeneration, is a spiritual love, the principal loadstone and attractive whereof is grace and holiness; it is a love which embraceth a "righteous man in the name of a righteous man."

2. A carnal man's love to saints, is a limited and bounded love; it is not universal "to the seed." Now as in sin, he that doth not make conscience of every sin, maketh conscience of no sin as sin; so he who doth not love all in whom the image of Christ is found, loveth none for that of the image of Christ which is found in them.

Now then, if the love we bear to the people of God may possibly arise from natural love only, or from some carnal respect; or if it be a limited love, not extended to all the people of God, then it is possible that a man may love the people of God, and yet be no better than almost a Christian.

XVIII. A man may obey the commands of God, yea, many of the commands of God, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Balaam seems very conscientious of steering his course by the compass of God's command. When Balak sent to him to come and curse the people of God, saith Balaam, "If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord my God:" and so saith he, "The word that God putteth in my mouth, that shall I speak." The young man went far in obedience, "All these have I observed from my youth up;" and yet he was but a hypocrite, for he forsook Christ after all.

Objection. But is it not said, "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me; and he that loveth me shall be loved of my father; and I will love him, and manifest myself unto him." And doth not our Lord Christ tell us expressly, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatever I command you." And can a man be a friend of Christ, and be but almost a Christian?

I answer—There is an obedience to the commands of Christ, which is a sure proof of our Christianity and friendship to Christ.

This obedience hath a threefold property.

It is, 1. Evangelical. 2. Universal. 3. Continual.

First, It is evangelical obedience, and that both in matter and manner, ground and end.

In the matter of it; and that is what God requires: “Ye are my friends, if ye do whatever I command you.”

In the manner of it; and that is according as God requires: “God is a Spirit, and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth.”

In the ground of it; and that is, “a pure heart, a good conscience, and a faith unfeigned.”

In the end of it; and that is, the honour and glory of God: “Whatever ye do, do all to the glory of God.”

Secondly, It is a universal obedience, which extendeth itself to all the commands of God alike: it respects the duties of both tables. Such was the obedience of Caleb, “who followed the Lord fully;” and of David, who had “respect to all his commands.”

Thirdly, It is a continual obedience, a putting the hand to God’s plough, without looking back: “I have inclined my heart to perform thy statutes always, even to the end.”

He that thus obeys the command of God, is a Christian indeed; a friend of Christ indeed. But all obedience to the commands of God, is not this obedience; For,

1. There is a partial obedience—a peace-meal religion, when a man obeys God in one command, and not in another; owns him in one duty, and not in another; when a man seems to make conscience of the duties of one table, and not of the duties of another. This is the religion of most.

Now this obedience is no obedience; for as he that doth not love God above all, doth not love God at all; so he that doth not obey all the commands universally, cannot be said to obey any command truly. It is said of those in Samaria that they “feared the Lord, and served their own gods after their own manner.” And yet in the very next verse it is said, “They feared not the Lord;” so that their fear of the Lord was no fear. In like manner, that obedience to God is no obedience, which is but a partial and piece-meal obedience.

2. A man may obey much, and yet be in his old nature; and if so, then all his obedience in that estate is but a painted sin: “He that offereth an oblation, is as if he offered swine’s blood; and he that burneth incense, as if he blessed an idol.” The nature must be renewed, before the command can be rightly obeyed; for “a corrupt tree cannot bring forth good fruit.” Whatever a man’s performances are, they cannot be called obedience, whilst the heart remaineth unregenerate, because the principle is false and unsound. Every duty done by a believer, is accepted of God, as part of his obedience to the will of God, though it be done in much weakness; because, though the believer’s hand is weak, yet “his heart is right.” The hypocrite may have the most active hand, but the believer hath the most faithful and sincere heart.

3. A man may obey the law, and yet have no love to the Lawgiver. A carnal heart may do the command of God, but he cannot love God, and therefore cannot do it aright; for love to God is the foundation and spring of all true obedience. Every command of God is to be done in love: this is the "fulfilling of the law." The apostle saith, "Though I bestow all my goods to feed the poor, and though I give my body to be burned, (these seem to be acts of the highest obedience) yet if I had not love, it profits me nothing."

4. I might add, that a man may be much in obedience from sinister and base selfish ends: as the Pharisees prayed much, gave much alms, fasted much: but our Lord Christ tells us, that it was "that they might be seen of men, and have glory of men." Most of the hypocrite's piety empties itself into vain-glory; and therefore he is but an empty vine in all he does, because "he bringeth forth fruit to himself." It is the end that justifies the action: indeed, a good end cannot make a bad action good, but yet the want of a good end makes a good action bad.

Now then, if a man may obey the commands of God partially, and by halves; if he may do it, and yet be in his natural state; if he may obey the commands of God, and yet not love God; if the ends of his obedience may be sinful and unwarrantable,—then a man may be much in obeying the commands of God, and yet be but almost a Christian.

XIX. A man may be sanctified, and yet be but almost a Christian.

Every kind of sanctification doth not make a man a new creature; for many are sanctified that are never renewed. You read of them that “count the blood of the covenant, wherewith they were sanctified, an unholy thing.”

Objection. But doth not the Scripture tell us, that “both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all one: for which cause, he is not ashamed to call them brethren.” And can a man be one with Christ, and yet be but almost a Christian?

Answer. To this I answer—You must know there is a twofold work of sanctification spoken of in Scripture.

The one, common and ineffectual.

The other, special and effectual.

That work of sanctification which is true and effectual, is the working of the Spirit of God in the soul, enabling it to the mortifying of all sin, to the obeying of every command, “to walking with God in all well-pleasing.” Now, whoever is thus sanctified, is one with him that sanctifieth. Christ will not be ashamed to call such brethren; for they are “flesh of his flesh, and bone of his bone.”

But then there is a more common work of sanctification, which is ineffectual as to the two great works of dying to sin, and living to God. This kind of sanctification may help to restrain sin, but not to mortify sin; it may lop off the boughs, but it layeth not the axe to the root of the tree;

it sweeps and garnishes the room with common virtues, but doth not adorn it with saving graces; so that a man is but almost a Christian, notwithstanding this sanctification.

Or thus, there is an inward and outward sanctification.

Inward sanctification is that which deals with the soul and its faculties, understanding, conscience, will, memory, and affections. Outward sanctification is that which deals with the life and conversation. Both these must concur to make a man a Christian indeed: therefore, the apostle puts them together in his prayer for the Thessalonians: "The God of peace sanctify you wholly; and, I pray God, your whole spirit, and soul, and body, be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." A man is then sanctified wholly, when he is sanctified both inwardly and outwardly—both in heart and affections, and in life and conversation. Outward sanctification is not enough without inward, nor inward without outward: we must have both "clean hands, and a pure heart." The heart must be pure, that we may not incur blame from within; and the hands must be clean, that we may not incur shame from without. We must have hearts "sprinkled from an evil conscience, and bodies washed with pure water." "We must cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit." Inward purity is the most excellent, but, without the outward, it is not sufficient; the true Christian is made up of both.

Now many have clean hands, but unclean hearts.

They wash the outside of the cup and platter, when all is filthy within. Now, the former without the latter, profiteth a man no more than it profited Pilate, who condemned Christ, to wash his hands in the presence of the people: he washed his hands of the blood of Christ, and yet had a hand in the death of Christ. The Egyptian temples were beautiful on the outside, but within you shall find nothing but some serpent, or crocodile. "He is not a Jew which is one outwardly." Judas was a saint without, but a sinner within; openly, a disciple, but secretly, a devil.

Some pretend to inward sanctity without outward. This is the pretence of the open sinner: "Though I sometimes drop an idle, foolish word," saith he, "or though I sometimes swear an oath, yet I think no hurt:—I thank God, my heart is as good as the best!" Such are like the sinner Moses mentions, that "blessed himself in his heart, saying, I shall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine own heart, to add drunkenness to thirst."

Some pretend to outward sanctity, without inward. Such are like the Scribes and Pharisees, "who outwardly appear righteous unto men, but within are full of hypocrisy and iniquity;" fair professors, but foul sinners.

Inward sanctity without outward, is impossible; for it will not reform the life. Outward sanctity without inward, is unprofitable; for it will not reform the heart: a man is not a true Christian without both. The body doth not make a man without the soul, nor the soul without the body; both are essential to the being of man: so the sanctification of both, are essential to the being of the new man. True sanctification begins at the heart, but works out into the life and conversation; and if so, then man may attain to an outward sanctification, and yet, for want of an inward, be no better than almost a Christian.

And so I shall end this long pursuit of the almost Christian, in his progress heaven-ward, with this one general conclusion:—

XX. A man may do all, as to external duties and worship, that a true Christian can; and, when he hath done all, be but almost a Christian.

You must know, all the commands of God have an intra, and an extra: there is, as I may say, the body and the soul of the command. And accordingly, there is an internal and an external worship of God.

Now, the internal acts of worshipping of God, are to love God, to fear God, to delight in God, to trust in God, &c.

The external acts of worshipping of God, are by praying, teaching, hearing, &c.

Now there is a vast difference between these internal and external acts of worship; and such a difference there is, that they distinguish the altogether from the almost Christian; the sincere believer from the unsound professor: and, indeed, in this very thing the main difference between them doth lie.

1. Internal acts of worship are good propter fieri; the goodness doth adhere intrinsically to the thing done. A man cannot love God, nor fear God, but it will be imputed to him for a gracious act, and a great part of his holiness. But now, external acts of worship are not denominated good, so much from the matter done, propter fieri, as from the manner of doing them. A man cannot sin in loving and delighting in God, but he may sin in praying and hearing, &c. for want of a due manner.

2. Internal acts of worship put a goodness into external: it is our faith, our love, our fear of God, that makes our duties good.

3. They better the heart, and greater the degrees of a man's holiness. External duties do not always do this. A man may pray, and yet his heart never the holier; he may hear the word, and yet his heart never the softer: but now, the more a man fears God, the wiser he is: the more a man loves God, the holier he is. Love is the perfection of holiness: we shall never be perfect in holiness, until we come to be perfect in love.

4. There is such an excellency in this internal worship, that he who mixes it with his external duties, is a true Christian when he doth least: but without this mixture, he is but almost a Christian that doth most.

Internal acts of worship, joined with outward, sanctify them, and make them accepted of God, though few: external acts of worship, without inward, make them abhorred of God, though they be never so many. So that, although the almost Christian may do all those duties in hypocrisy, which a true Christian doth in sincerity; nay, though in doing external duties, he may out-do the true Christian, as the comet makes a greater blaze than the true star: if Elijah fast and mourn, Baal's priests will cut their flesh; yet he cannot do those internal duties, that the meanest true Christian can.

The almost Christian can pray, but he cannot love God; he can teach, or hear, &c. but he cannot take delight in God. Mark Job's query concerning the hypocrite: "Will he delight himself in the Almighty?" He will pray to the Almighty, but will he delight himself in the Almighty? Will he take pleasure in God? Ah, no! he will not—he cannot! Delight in God ariseth from a suitability between the faculty, and the object; now, none more unsuitable, than God and a carnal heart. Delight arising from the having what we desire, and from enjoying what we have. How then can he delight in God, that neither enjoyeth, nor hath, nor truly desireth God? Delight in God is one of the highest exercises of grace: and therefore, how can he delight in God, that hath no grace?

Why, then, should any saint of God be discouraged, when he hears how far the almost Christian may go in the way to heaven: whereas, he that is the weakest true believer, that hath the least true grace, goes farther than he; for he believes in, and loves God.

Should the almost Christian do less, as to matter of external duties, yet, if he had but the least true faith, the least sincerity of love to Christ, he would surely be saved; and should the true Christian do ten times more duties than he doth, yet, had he not faith in Christ, and love to Christ, he would surely be rejected.

O, therefore, let not any weak believer be discouraged, though hypocrites may out-do them, and go beyond them in duty; for all their duties are done in hypocrisy, but your faith and love to God in duties, is a proof of your sincerity.

1. I do not speak this to discourage any soul in the doing of duties, or to beat down outward performances, but to rectify the soul in the doing of them. As the apostle saith, “Covet earnestly the best gifts; but yet I show you a more excellent way.” So I say, covet the best gifts; covet much to be in duties, much in prayer, much in hearing, &c. “But I will show you a more excellent way;” and that is, the way of faith and love. Pray much, but then believe much too. Hear much; read much; but then love God much too. Delight in the word and ordinances of God much, but then delight in the God of ordinances more.

And when you are most in duties, as to your use of them, O then be sure to be above duties, as to your resting and dependance upon them. Would you be Christians, indeed—altogether Christians? O then, be much in the use and exercise of ordinances, but be much more in faith and dependance upon Christ and his righteousness. When your obedience is most to the command, then let your faith be most upon the promise. The professor rests in duties, and so is but almost a Christian; but you must be sure to rest upon the Lord Christ. This is the way to be altogether Christians; for, if ye believe, then are ye Abraham’s seed, and heirs according to the promise. And thus I have answered the first query: to wit, how far a man may go in the way to heaven, and yet be but almost a Christian.

1. He may have much knowledge.
2. He may have great gifts.
3. He may have a high profession.
4. He may do much against sin.
5. He may desire grace.
6. He may tremble at the word.
7. He may delight in the word.
8. He may be a member of the church of Christ.
9. He may have great hopes of heaven.
10. He may be under great and visible changes.
11. He may be very zealous in the matters of religion.
12. He may be much in prayer.
13. He may suffer for Christ.
14. He may be called of God.
15. He may, in some sense, have the Spirit of God.
16. He may have some kind of faith.
17. He may love the people of God.
18. He may go far in obeying the commands of God.
19. He may be, in some sense, sanctified.
20. He may do all, as to external duties, that a true Christian can, and yet be no better than almost a Christian.

QUESTION II.

Why, or whence is it, that many men go so far, as that they come to be almost Christians?

First, It may be to answer the call of conscience. Though few men have grace, yet all men have conscience. Now do but observe, and you shall see how far conscience may go in this work.

1. Conscience owns a God, and that this God must be worshipped and served by the creature. Atheists in practice, we have many; such as the apostle speaks of: "They profess to know God, but in works they deny him." But atheists in judgment none can be. Tully, a heathen, could say, "Nulla gens tam barbara," &c. Now there being such a light in conscience, as to discover that there is a God, and that he must be worshipped by the help of farther light—the light of the word. A man may be enabled to do much in the ways of God, and yet his heart without a dram of grace.

2. Know this, that natural conscience is capable of great improvements from the means of grace. Sitting under the ordinances may exceedingly heighten the endowments of conscience. It may be much regulated, though it be not at all renewed: it may be enlightened, convinced, and yet never savingly converted and changed. You read in Hebrews vi. 4. of some that were "once enlightened, and tasted of the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost." What work shall we call this? It could not be a saving work, a true change and conversion of state; for, notwithstanding this enlightening, and tasting, and partaking, yet they are here said to fall away, verse 6. Had it been a true work of grace, they could never have fallen away from that. A believer may fall, but he cannot fall away: he may fall foully, but he cannot fall finally; for, "underneath are the everlasting arms." His faith is established in the strength of that prayer of Christ, that our faith fail not. Nay, he tells us expressly, that it is eternal life which he gives, from which we shall never perish.

This work, then, here spoken of, cannot be any saving work, because it is not an abiding work; for they that are under it, are said to fall away from it. But though it be not a saving grace, yet it is a supernatural work. It is an improvement made by the word upon the consciences of men, through the power of the Spirit; and therefore they are said to "taste the good word of God," and to be made "partakers of the Holy Ghost." They have not the Spirit abiding in them savingly, but striving with them, and working upon them convincingly, to the awakening and setting conscience on work. And conscience, thus stirred, may carry a man very far in religion, and in the duties of the gospel, and yet be but a natural conscience.

A common work of the Spirit, may stead a man very much in the duties of religion, though it must be a special work of the Spirit that steads a man to salvation. A man may have the assisting presence of the Spirit, enabling him to preach and pray, and yet he may perish for want of the renewing presence of the Spirit, enabling him to believe. Judas had the former, and yet perished for want of the latter. He had the Spirit assisting him to cast out devils; but yet he had not the Spirit renewing him; for he was cast out himself. Thus a man may have an improved conscience, and yet be a stranger to a renewed conscience; and conscience, thus improved, may put a man very much upon duty. I pray God, none of us mistake a conscience, thus improved by the word, for a conscience renewed by the Spirit. The mistake is very easy, especially when a life of duties is the fruit of it.

3. The conscience of a natural man is subject to distress and trouble. Though a natural conscience is not sanctified with grace, yet it is often troubled at sin. Trouble of conscience is not incident to believers only, but sometimes to unbelievers also. A believer's conscience is sometimes troubled, when his sin is truly pardoned: and a natural man's conscience is troubled for sin, though it is never freed from sin. God sometimes sets the word home upon the sinner's conscience, and applies the terrors of the law to it; and this fills the soul with fear and horror of death and hell. Now, in this case, the soul usually betakes itself to a life of duties, merely to fence trouble out of conscience.

When Absalom sets on fire Joab's corn fields, then he runs to him, though he refused before: so when God lets a spark of hell, as it were, fall upon the sinner's conscience, in applying the terrors of the word, this drives the sinner to a life of duties, which he never minded before. The ground of many a man's engaging in religion, is the trouble of his conscience; and the end of his continuing in religion, is the quieting of conscience. If conscience would never check him, God should never hear from him.

Natural conscience hath a voice, and speaks aloud many times in the sinner's ears, and telleth him, This ought not to be done: God must not be forgotten: the commands of God ought not to be slighted: living in sin will be the ruin of the soul. And hence it is, that a natural man runs to duties, and takes up a lifeless and graceless profession, that he may thereby silence conscience. As a man sick in his stomach, whatever sweet morsel he hath eaten, he brings up all; and although it was sweet in the eating, yet it is bitter in the rising; so it fareth with the sinner, when he is sermon-sick, or conscience-sick. Though his sin was sweet in the practice, yet the thought of it riseth bitter upon the conscience: and then his profession of religion is the pill he roll-eth about in his mouth, to take away the bitterness of sin's taste.

4. Natural conscience, enlightened by the word, may discover to a man much of the misery of a natural state; though not effectually to bring him out of it, yet so as to make him restless and weary in it. It may show a sinner his nakedness; and hereupon the soul runneth to a life of duties; thinking hereby to stead the misery of his case, and to make a covering for his nakedness. It is said, "that when Adam and Eve saw they were naked, they sewed fig-leaves together, and made themselves a covering." So when once the sinner seeth his nakedness and vile-ness by reason of sin, whereas he should run to Christ, and close with him, and beg his righteousness for a covering, "that the shame of his nakedness doth not appear;" he rather runneth to a life of duties and performances, and thus maketh himself a covering with the fig-leaves of a profession, without Christ truly embraced, and conscience at all renewed. Natural man would fain be his own Saviour; and supposeth a change of state to be a thing within his own power; and that the true work of grace lieth in leaving off the practice of sin, and taking up a life of duties: and, therefore, upon this principle, doth many a graceless professor out-strip a sound believer; for he resteth on his own performances, and hopeth these will commend him to God.

Question. If a natural conscience may go thus far, then what difference is there between this natural conscience in hypocrites and sinners, and a renewed conscience in believers? or, how may I know whether the working of my conscience be the working of nature only, or else of grace wrought in it?

Answer. I grant that it is difficult to distinguish between the one and the other; and the difficulty hath a twofold rise.

1. It ariseth from that hypocrisy that is in the best saints. The weakest believer is no hypocrite, but yet there is some hypocrisy in the strongest believer. Where there is most grace, there is some sin; and where there is most sincerity, yet there is some hypocrisy.

Now it is very incident to a tender conscience to misgive and mistrust its state, upon the sight of any sin. When he sees hypocrisy break out in any duty or performance, then he complains, "Surely my aims are not sincere ! my conscience is not renewed ! it is but natural conscience enlightened, not by grace purged and changed.”*

2. It ariseth from that resemblance there is between grace and hypocrisy ; for hypocrisy is a resemblance of grace, without substance ; the likeness of grace, without the life of grace. There is no grace but a hypocrite may have somewhat like it ; and there is no duty done by a Christian, but a hypocrite may outstrip him in it. Now, when one that hath not true grace shall go farther than one that hath, this may well make the believer question whether his grace be true or not ; or whether the workings of his conscience be not the workings of nature only, rather than of grace wrought in it.

But to answer the question—You may make a judgment of this in these seven particulars:—

1. If a natural man’s conscience putteth him upon duty, he doth usually bound himself in the work of God. His duties are limited ; his obedience is a limited obedience. He doth one duty, and neglecteth another. He picketh and chooseth among the commands of God ; obeyeth one, and slighteth another. Thus much is enough ; what need any more ? If I do thus and thus, I shall go to heaven at last. But now, where conscience is renewed by grace, there it is otherwise. Though there may be many weaknesses which accompany its duties, yet that soul never bounds itself in working after God: it never loves God so much, but still it would love him more; nor seeks him so much, but still it would seek him more; nor doth it serve God so well at any time, but it still makes conscience of serving him better. A renewed conscience is a spring of universal obedience: for it seeth an infinite excellency, and goodness, and holiness in God; and therefore would fain have its service rise up towards some proportionableness to the object. A God of infinite excellency and goodness, should have infinite love, saith conscience: a holy God should have service from a holy heart, saith conscience.

* Pygmalion made an image so lively that he deceived himself ; and, taking the picture for a person, he fell in love with the picture !

Now then, if I set bounds to my love to God, or to my service to God; if I limit myself in my obedience to the holy God; love one command, and slight another; obey in one point, and yet lie cross in another; then is all I do but the workings of a natural conscience. But on the other hand, if I love the Lord with my whole heart, and whole soul, and serve him with all my might and strength; if "I esteem all God's precepts concerning all things to be right, and have respect to all his commands;" then is my love and service from a renewed conscience.

2. If a natural man's conscience check or accuse for sin, then he seeketh to stop the mouth of it, but not to satisfy it. Most of the natural man's duties are to still and stifle conscience. But now, the believer chooseth rather to let conscience cry, than to stop the mouth of it, until he can do it upon good terms, and till he can fetch in satisfaction to it from the blood of Jesus Christ, by fresh acts of faith apprehended and applied. The natural man seeketh to still the noise of conscience, rather than to remove the guilt. The believer seeketh the removal of guilt by the application of Christ's blood; and then conscience is quiet of itself. As a foolish man, having a mote fallen into his eye, and making it water, he wipeth away the water, and labours to keep it dry, but never searcheth his eye to get out the mote; but a wise man mindeth not so much the wiping, as the searching his eye; somewhat is got in, and that causeth the watering, and therefore the cause must be removed. Now then, if when conscience accuseth for sin, I take up a life of duties, a form of godliness, to stop the mouth of conscience; and if hereupon conscience be still and quiet; then is this but a natural conscience: but if, when conscience checks, it will not be satisfied with any thing but the blood of Christ, and therefore I use duties to bring me to Christ; and if I beg the sprinkling of his blood upon conscience, and labour not so much to stop the mouth of it, as to remove guilt from it; then is this a renewed conscience.

3. There is no natural man, let him go never so far, let him do never so much in the matters of religion, but still he has his Delilah, his bosom-lust. Judas went far, but he carried his covetousness along with him. Herod went far; he did many things under the force of John's ministry; but yet there was one thing he did not; he did not put away his brother's wife—his Herodias lay in his bosom still. Nay, commonly all the natural man's duties are to hide some sin; his profession is only made use of for a cover-shame. But now the renewed conscience hateth all sin, as David did: "I hate every false way;"—he regardeth no iniquity in his heart: he useth duties, not to cover sin, but to help work down, and work out sin. Now then, if I profess religion; if I make mention of the name of the Lord, and make my "boast of the law, and yet through breaking the law dishonour God;" if I live in the love of any sin, and make use of my profession to cover it, then am I a hypocrite, and my duties flow but from a natural conscience: but, on the other hand, if I "name the name of the Lord Jesus, and withal depart from iniquity;" if I use duties, not to cover, but to discover and mortify sin; then am I upright before God, and my duties flow from a renewed conscience.

4. A natural man prides himself in his duties. If he be much in duty, then he is much lifted up under duty. So did the Pharisee: "God, I thank thee that I am not as other men are;" and why? where lay the difference? why, "I fast twice in the week: I give tithes of all," &c.

But now take a gracious heart, a renewed conscience, and when his duties are at highest, then is his heart at lowest. Thus it was with the apostle Paul; he was much in service, "in season, and out of season;" preaching up the Lord Jesus with all boldness and earnestness; and yet very humble, in a sense of his own unworthiness, under all: "I am not worthy to be called an apostle. To me, who am less than the least of all saints, is this grace given, that I should preach among the Gentiles the unsearchable riches of Christ." And again, "Of sinners, I am chief." Thus a believer, when he is highest in duties, then is he lowest in humility. Duty puffeth up the hypocrite, but a believer comes away humbled; and why? because the hypocrite hath had no visions of God: he hath seen only his own gifts and parts, and this exalteth him; but the believer hath seen God, and enjoyed communion with God, and this humbleth him. Communion with God, though it be very refreshing, yet it is also very abasing and humbling to the creature. Hierome observeth on Zeph. i. 1. where it is said, that "Cushi was the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah;" that "Amariah signifieth 'the Word of the Lord;' Gedaliah signifieth 'the Greatness of the Lord;' and Cushi is interpreted 'Humility,' or 'my Ethiopian.'" "So that," saith he, "from the Word of the Lord, cometh a sight of the Greatness of the Lord; and from a sight of the greatness of the Lord, cometh humility."

Now then, If I pride myself in any duty, and am puffed up under my performances; then have I not seen nor met with God in any duty. But on the other hand, if when my gifts are at highest, my heart is at lowest; if when my spirit is most raised, my heart is then most humbled; if, in the midst of all my services, I can maintain a sense of my own unworthiness; if Cushi be the son of Gedaliah, then have I seen and had communion with God in duty, and my performances are from a renewed conscience.

5. Look what that is to which the heart doth secretly render the glory of a duty, and that is the principle of the duty. In Hab. i. 16. we read of them that “sacrifice to their net, and burn incense to their drag.” Where the glory of an action is rendered to a man’s self, the principle of that action is self. All rivers run into the sea; that is an argument they came from the sea: so when all a man’s duties terminate in self, then is self the principle of all. Now all the natural man’s duties run into himself. He was never, by a thorough work of grace, truly cast out of himself, and brought to deny himself; and therefore he can rise no higher than himself in all he does. He was never brought to be poor in spirit, and so to live upon another; to be carried out of all duties to Jesus Christ. But the believer giveth the glory of all his services to God; whatever strength or life there is in duty. God hath all the glory; for he is by grace outed of himself, and therefore seeth no excellence or unworthiness in self.

“I laboured more abundantly than they all,” saith the apostle; but to whom doth he ascribe the glory of this? to self? No: “Yet not I,” saith he, “but the grace of God which was with me.” Whenever the grace of Christ is wrought in the heart as a principle of duty, you shall find the soul when it is most carried out, with a Yet not I, in the mouth of it. “I live, yet not I; I laboured more abundantly than all, yet not I.” Self is disclaimed, and Christ most advanced, when it is from grace that the heart is quickened: the twenty-four elders cast their crowns at Christ’s feet.

There are two things very hard: one is, to take the shame of our sins to ourselves; the other is, to give the glory of our services to Christ. Now then, if I sacrifice to my own net; if I aim at my own credit or profit, and give the glory of all I do to self; then do I "sow to the flesh," and was never yet cast out of self, but act only from a natural conscience. But if I give the glory of all my strength and life in duty only to God; if I magnify grace in all, and can truly say in all I do, Yet not I; then am I truly cast out of self, and do what I do with a renewed conscience.

6. Though a natural conscience may put a man much upon service, yet it never presses to the attainment of holiness. So that he carrieth an un-sanctified heart under all. How long was Judas a professor, and not one dram of grace that he had got? The foolish virgins, you know, "took their lamps, but took no oil in their vessels;" that is, they looked more after a profession, than after a sanctification. But now, when a renewed conscience putteth a man upon duty, it is succeeded with the growth of holiness. As grace helpeth to the doing of duty, so duty helpeth to the growing of grace; a believer is the more holy and the more heavenly, by his being much in duties.

Now then, if I am much in a life of duties, and yet a stranger to a life of holiness; if I maintain a high profession, and yet have not a true work of sanctification; if, like children in the rickets, I grow big in the head, but weak in the feet; then have I gifts and parts, but no grace; and though I am much in service, yet have I but a natural conscience. But, on the other hand, if the holiness of my conversation carrieth a proportion to my profession; if I am not “a hearer of the word only, but a doer of it;” if grace groweth in seasons of duty, then do I act in the things of God from a renewed conscience.

7. And lastly, If a natural conscience be the spring of duty, why then this spring runs fastest at first, and so abateth, and at last drieth up. But if a renewed conscience, a sanctified heart, be the spring of duty, then this spring will never dry up. It will run always, from first to last, and run quicker at last than first: “I know thy works, and the last to be more than the first. The righteous shall hold on his way; and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger.”

Question. But you will say, Why doth that man abate and languish in his duties, that doth them from a natural conscience, more than he that doth them from a renewed conscience?

Answer. The reason is, because they grow upon a fallible root, a decaying root, and that is nature. Nature is a fading root, and so are all its fruits fading; but the duties done by a renewed conscience, are fruits that grow upon a lasting root; and that is Christ. “Gifts have their root in nature, but grace hath its root in Christ:” and therefore the weakest grace shall outlive the greatest gifts and parts; because there is life in the root of the one, and not in that of the other. Gifts and grace differ like the leather of your shoe, and the skin of your foot. Take a pair of shoes that have the thickest soles, and if you go much in them, the leather weareth out, and in a little time a man's foot cometh to the ground; but now a man that goeth barefoot all his days, the skin of his feet does not wear out. Why should not the sole of his foot sooner wear out than the sole of his shoe; for the leather is much thicker than the skin? The reason is, because there is life in the one, and not in the other; there is life in the skin of the foot, and therefore that holdeth out, and groweth thicker and thicker, harder and harder; but there is no life in the sole of his shoe, and therefore that weareth out, and waxeth thinner and thinner: so it is with gifts and grace. Now then, if I decay and abate, and grow weary of a profession, and fall away at last; if I begin in the spirit, and end in the flesh; then was all I did from a natural conscience: but if I grow and hold out, if I persevere to the end, and my "last works be more than my first," then I act from a renewed conscience.

And thus I have, in seven things, answered that question, namely, If conscience may go thus far in putting a man upon duties, then what difference is there between this natural conscience in hypocrites and sinners, and renewed conscience in believers?

And that is the first answer to the main query, namely, "Whence is it that many men go so far, as that they come to be almost Christians?" It is to answer the call of conscience.

Secondly, It is from the power of the word under which they live. Though the word doth not work effectually upon all, yet it hath a great power upon the hearts of sinners to reform them, though not to renew them.

1. It hath a discerning, discovering power: “The word of God is quick and powerful, sharper than any two-edged sword, piercing to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow; and is a discerner of the thoughts and intents of the heart.” This is the glass wherein every one may see what man he is. As the light of the sun discovers the little motes, so the light of the word, shining into conscience, discovers little sins.

2. The word hath the power of a law. It gives law to the whole soul; binds conscience. It is, therefore, frequently called the law in Scripture: “Unless thy law had been my delight, &c.—To the law, and to the testimony.” This is spoken of the whole word of God, which is therefore called a law, because of its binding power upon the conscience.

3. It hath a judging power: “The word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him at the last day.” The sentence that God will pass upon sinners hereafter, is no other than what the word passeth upon him here. The judgment of God, is not a day wherein God will pass any new sentence; but it is such a day wherein God will make a solemn, public ratification of the judgment passed by the ministry of the word upon souls here. This I gather clearly from Matthew xviii. 18. “Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth, shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall lose on earth, shall be loosed in heaven: so that, by bringing a man’s heart to the word, and trying it by that, he may quickly know what that sentence is that God will pass upon his soul in the last day: for as the judgment of the word is now, such will the judgment of God be concerning him in the last day.

Indeed, there is a two-fold power, farther than this, in the word. It hath a begetting and saving power: but this is put forth only upon some. But the other is more extensive, and hath a great causality upon a profession of goodness, even among them that have no grace.

A man that is under this threefold power of discerning law and judgment, that hath his heart ransacked and discovered, his conscience bound and awed, his state and sinful condition judged and condemned; may take up a resolution of a new life, and convert himself to great profession of religion.

Thirdly, A man may go far in this course of profession from affectation of applause and credit, and to get a name in the world. As it is said of the Pharisees, they “love to pray in the market-places, and in the corners of the streets, to be seen of men.” Many are of Machiavel’s principle—That the appearance of virtue is to be sought; because, though the use of it is a trouble, yet the credit of it is a help. Jerome, in his Epistle to Julian, calls such, “the base bond-slaves of common fame.” Many a man doth that for credit, that he will not do for conscience; and owns religion more for the sake of lust, than for the sake of Christ: thus making God’s stream to turn the devil’s mill.

Fourthly, It is from a desire of salvation. There is in all men a desire of salvation: it is natural to every being to love and seek its own preservation.

“Who will show us any good?”—This is the language of nature, seeking happiness to itself.

Many a man may be carried so far out in the desires of salvation, as to do many things to obtain it. So did the young man: “Good Master, what good thing shall I do, that I may inherit eternal life?” He went far, and did much, obeying many commands, and all out of a desire of salvation.—So, then, put these together, and there is an answer to that question.

“The call of conscience—the power of the word—the affectation of credit—and the desire of salvation.” These may carry a man so far as to be almost a Christian.

QUESTION III.

Whence is it that many are but almost Christians when they have gone thus far? What is the cause of this?

ANSWER. I might multiply answers to this question, but I shall instance in two only, which I judge the most material.

First, It is for want of right and sound conviction. If a man be not thoroughly convinced of sin, and his heart truly broken, whatever his profession of godliness may be, yet he will be sure to miscarry. Every work of conviction is not a thorough work: there are convictions that are not only natural and rational, but not from the powerful work of the Spirit of God.

Rational conviction is “that which proceeds from the working of a natural conscience, charging guilt from the light of nature, by the help of those common principles of reason that are in all men." This is the conviction you read of, Rom. ii. 14, 15. It is said, that the Gentiles who had not the law, yet had their consciences bearing witness, and accusing or excusing one another. Though they had not the light of Scripture, yet they had convictions from the light of nature. Now, by the help of the Gospel light, these convictions may be much improved, and yet the heart not renewed.

But then there is a spiritual conviction; and this is that work of the Spirit of God upon the sinner's heart by the word, whereby the guilt and filth of sin is fully discovered, and the wo and misery of a natural state distinctly set home upon the conscience, to the dread and terror of the sinner whilst he abides in that state and condition. And this is the conviction that is a sound and thorough work. Many have their convictions, but not this spiritual conviction.

Query. Now you will say, "Suppose I am at any time under conviction, how shall I know whether my convictions be only from a natural conscience, or whether they be from the Spirit of God?"

Answer. I should digress too much to draw out the solution of this question to its just length. I shall, therefore, in five things only, lay down the most considerable difference between the one and the other.

1. Natural convictions reach chiefly to open and scandalous sins. Sins against the light of nature; for natural conviction can reach no farther than natural light. But spiritual conviction reaches to secret, inward, and undiscerned sins: such as hypocrisy, formality, lukewarmness, deadness, and hardness of heart, &c.

Observe then, whether your trouble for sin looks inward as well as outward, and reaches not only to open sins, but to secret lusts, to inward and spiritual sins: and if so, this is a sure sign of the work of the Spirit, because the trouble occasioned by these sins, bears a more immediate relation to the holiness of God, who only is offended by them; they being such as none else can see or know.

2. Natural convictions deal only with a man's conversation, not with his state and condition: with sins actual, not original. But spiritual conviction reaches to all sins; to sins of heart, as well as sins of life; to the sin of our nature, as well as the sins of practice; to the sin that is born in us, as well as the sin that is done by us. Where the Spirit of the Lord cometh to work effectually in any soul, he holdeth the glass of the law before the sinner's eyes, and openeth his eyes to look into the glass, and to see all that deformity and filthiness that is in his heart and nature.

The apostle Paul said, "I had not known sin but by the law." How can this be true, that he had not known sin but by the law, when the light of nature discovers sin? It is said of the Gentiles, that having not the law, they had a law to themselves. This sin, therefore, that the apostle speaks of, is not to be understood of sin actual, but of sin original: "I had not known the pollution of nature, that fountain of sin that is within; this I had not known but by the law." And, indeed, this is a discovery that natural light cannot make.

It is true, the philosopher could say, "That lust is the first and chief of all sins." But I cannot think he meant it of original sin, but of the inordinancy of appetite and desire, at most; for I find that the wisest of the philosophers understood nothing of original sin. Hear Seneca: "Sin is not boru with thee, but brought in since."

Quintilian saith, "It is more marvel that any one man sins, than that all men should live honestly; sin is so against the nature of men."—How blind were they in this point! And so was Paul, till the Spirit of the Lord discovered it to him by the word. And indeed this is a discovery proper to the Spirit. It is he that makes the sinner see all the deformity and filthiness that is within; it is he that pulleth off all the sinner's rags, and makes him see his naked and wretched condition; it is he that shows us the blindness of the mind, the stubbornness of the will, the disorderedness of the affections, the searedness of the conscience, the plague of our hearts, and the sin of our natures, and therein the desperateness of our state.

3. Natural convictions carry the soul out to look more on the evil that comes by sin, than on the evil that is in sin. So that the soul under this conviction is more troubled at the dread of hell, and wrath, and damnation, than at the vileness and heinous nature of sin. But now spiritual convictions work the soul into a greater sensibleness of the evil that is in sin, than of the evil that comes by sin: the dishonour done to God by walking contrary to his will; the wounds that are made in the heart of Christ; the grief that the Holy Spirit of God is put to,—this wounds the soul more than a thousand hells.

4. Natural convictions are not durable, they “are quickly worn out:” they are like a slight cut in the skin, that bleeds a little, and is sore for the present, but is soon healed again, and in a few days not so much as a scar to be seen. But spiritual convictions are durable, they cannot be worn out, they abide in the soul till they have reached their end, which is the change of the sinner.

The convictions of the Spirit, are like a deep wound in the flesh, that goes to the bone, and seems to endanger the life of the patient, and is not healed but with great skill, and when it is healed leaves a scar behind it, that when the patient is well, yet he can say, “Here is the mark of my wound, which will never wear out.” So a soul that is under spiritual conviction—his wound is deep, and not to be healed, but by the great skill of the heavenly Physician: and when it is healed, there are the tokens of it remaining in the soul, that can never be worn out; so that the soul may say, “Here are the marks and signs of my conviction still in my soul.”

5. Natural convictions make the soul shy of God. Guilt works fear, and fear causes estrangedness. Thus it was with Adam, when he saw his nakedness he ran away and hid himself from God. Now spiritual convictions drive not the soul from God, but unto God. Ephraim's conviction was spiritual, and he runs to God: "Turn thou me, and I shall be turned." So that there is, you see, a great difference between conviction and conversion: between that which is natural and that which is spiritual; that which is common, and that which is saving. Yea, such is the difference, that though a man hath never so much of the former, yet if he be without the latter, he is but almost a Christian, and therefore we have great reason to inquire more after this spiritual conviction. For,

1. Spiritual conviction is an essential part of sound conversion. Conversion begins here; true conversion begins in convictions, and true convictions end in conversion. Till the sinner be convinced of sin, he can never be converted from sin; Christ's coming was as a Saviour to die for sinners; and the Spirit's coming is to convince us as sinners, that we may close with Christ as a Saviour: till sin be thoroughly discovered to us, interest in the blood of Christ cannot rightly be claimed by us; nay, so long as sin is unseen, Christ will be unsought. "They that be whole need not the physician, but they that are sick."

2. Slight and common convictions, when they are but skin-deep, are the cause of much hypocrisy: slight convictions may bring the soul to clasp about Christ, but not to close with Christ; and this is the guise of a hypocrite. I know no other rise and spring of hypocrisy, like this of slight convictions: this hath filled the church of Christ with hypocrites. Nay, it is not only the spring of hypocrisy, but it is also the spring of apostacy. What was the cause that the seed was said to wither away? It was because it had no deepness of earth. Where there is thorough conviction, there is a depth of earth in the heart, and there the seed of the word grows; but where convictions are slight and common, there the seed withers for want of depth: so that you see clearly, in this one instance, whence it is that many are but almost Christians, when they have gone so far in religion, to wit, for want of sound convictions.

Secondly, And this hath a near relation to the former: "It is for want of a thorough work of grace first wrought in the heart:" where this is not, all a man's following profession comes to nothing; that scholar is never like to read well, that will needs be in his Grammar before he is out of his Primer: cloth that is not wrought well in the loom will never wear well, nor wear long, it will do little service; so that Christian that doth not come well off the loom, that hath not a thorough work of grace in his heart; will never wear well; he will shrink in the wetting, and never do much service for God. It is not the pruning of a bad tree that will make it bring forth good fruit: but the tree must be made good, before the fruit can be good.

He that takes up a profession of religion with an unbroken heart, will never serve Christ in that profession with his whole heart. If there be not a true change in that man's heart, that yet goes far, and does much in the ways of God, to be sure he will either die a hypocrite or an apostate.

Look, as in nature, if a man be not well born, but prove crooked or misshapen in the birth, why, he will be crooked as long as he lives: you may bolster or stuff out his clothes to conceal it, but the crookedness, the deformity remains still; you may hide it, but you cannot help it; it may be covered, but it cannot be cured. So it is in this case. If a man come into a profession of religion, but be not right born; if he be not “begotten of God, and born of the Spirit;” if there be not a thorough work of grace in his heart, all his profession of religion will never mend him; he may be bolstered out by a life of duties, but he will be but a hypocrite at last, for want of a thorough work at first; a form of godliness may cover his crookedness, but will never cure it.

A man can never be a true Christian, nor accepted of God, though in the highest profession of religion, without a work of grace in the heart. For,

1. There must be an answerableness in the frame of that man’s heart that would be accepted of God, to the duties done by him; the spirit and affections within, must carry a proportion to his profession without; prayer without faith, obedience to the law given, without fear and holy reverence of the lawgiver, God abhors: acts of internal worship must answer the duties of external worship. Now where there is no grace wrought in the heart, there can never be any proportion or answerableness in the frame of that man’s heart, to the duties done by him.

2. Those duties that find acceptance with God, must be done in sincerity. God doth not take our duties by tale, nor judge of us according to the frequency of our performances, but according to the sincerity of our hearts in the performance. It is this that commends both the doer and the duty to God; with sincerity God accepts the least we do, without sincerity God rejects the most we do, or can do. This is that temper of spirit which God highly delights in: "They that are of a froward heart are an abomination to the Lord, but such as are upright in the way are his delight." The apostle gives it a great epithet; he calls it, in 2 Cor. i. 12. the sincerity of God; that is, such a sincerity as is his special work upon the soul, setting the heart right and upright before him in all his ways. This is the crown of all our graces, and the condemnation of all our duties. Thousands perish, and go to hell in the midst of all their performances and duties, merely for want of a little sincerity of heart to God.

Now where there is not a change of state, a work of grace in the heart, there can be no sincerity to God-ward; for this is not an herb that grows in nature's garden: "The heart of man is naturally deceitful and desperately wicked:" more opposite to sincerity than to any thing; as things corrupted carry a greater dissimilitude to what they were than to any thing else which they never were.

"God made man upright." Now man voluntarily losing this, is become more unlike himself than any thing below himself; he is more like a lion, a wolf, a bear, a serpent, a toad, than to a man in innocency. So that it is impossible to find sincerity in any soul till there be a work of grace wrought there by the Spirit of God; and hence it is that a man is but almost a Christian when he hath done all.

QUESTION IV.

What is the reason that many go no farther in the profession of religion, than to be almost Christians?

Reason 1. It is because they deceive themselves in the truth of their own condition; they mistake their state, and think it good and safe, when it is bad and dangerous. A man may look upon himself as a member of Christ, and yet God may look upon him as a vessel of wrath; as a child of God, by looking more upon his sins than his graces, more upon his failings than his faith, more upon indwelling lusts than renewing grace, may think his case very bad when yet it is very good: "I am black," saith the spouse; "and yet," saith Christ, "O thou fairest among women!" So the sinner, by looking more upon his duties than his sins, may think he sees his name written in the book of life, and yet be in the account of God a very reprobate.

There is nothing more common than for a man to "think himself something when he is nothing;" and so he "deceives himself." Many a man blesses himself in his interest in Christ, when he is indeed a stranger to him. Many a man thinks his sin pardoned, when alas! "he is still in the gall of bitterness, and bond of iniquity." Many a man thinks he hath grace, when he hath none: "There is," saith Solomon, "that makes himself rich, and yet hath nothing." This was the very temper of Laodicea: "Thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not," (pray mind that,) "that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked."

Thou knowest not; as bad as she was she thought her state good; as poor as she was in grace, she thought she was rich; "as miserable and naked as she was, yet she thought she had need of nothing."

Now there are several rises or grounds of this mistake. I will name five to you.

First, The desperate deceitfulness of the heart of every natural man. "The heart is deceitful above all things." The Hebrew word is the same with Jacob's name. Now you know he was a supplanter of his brother Esau: "He is rightly called Jacob," saith he, "for he hath supplanted me these two times." So the word signifies, to be fraudulent, subtle, deceitful, and supplanting. Thus is the heart of every natural man, "deceitful above all things."

You read of the deceitfulness of the tongue.

And of the deceitfulness of riches.

And of the deceitfulness of beauty.

And of the deceitfulness of friends.

But yet the heart is deceitful above them all. Nay, you read of the deceitfulness of Satan, yet truly a man's heart is a greater deceiver than he; for he could never deceive a man, if his own heart did not deceive him. Now it is from hence that a man presumes upon the goodness of his case, from the desperate treachery of his own heart.

How common is it for men to boast of the goodness of their hearts? “I thank God, though I do not make such a show and pretence as some do, yet I have as good a heart as the best.” O do but hear Solomon in this case: “He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool.” Will any wise man commit his money to the cut-purse? Will he trust a cheat? It is a good rule, Remember to distrust;—and it was Austin’s prayer, That man that trusts to his own heart, shall be sure to find himself deceived at last.

Secondly, This mistake arises from the pride of a man’s spirit; there is a proud heart in every natural man: there was much of this pride in Adam’s sin, and there is much of it in all Adam’s sons. It is a radical sin, and from hence arises this overweening opinion of a man’s state and condition. Solomon saith, “Be not righteous overmuch.” Austin, speaking occasionally of these words, saith, it is “not meant of the righteousness of the wise man, but the pride of the presumptuous man.” Now in this sense every carnal man is righteous overmuch; though he hath none of that righteousness which commends him to God, to wit, the righteousness of Christ, yet he hath too much of that righteousness which commends him to himself, and that is self-righteousness.

A proud man hath an eye to see his beauty, but not his deformity; his parts, but not his spots; his seeming righteousness, but not his real wretchedness. “It must be a work of grace that must show a man the want of grace." The haughty eye looks upward, but the humble eye looks downward, and therefore this is the believer's motto, "The least of saints, the greatest of sinners;" but the carnal man's motto is, "I thank God I am not as other men."

Thirdly, Many deceive themselves with common grace instead of saving, through that resemblance that is between them. As many take counterfeit money for current coin, so do too many take common grace for true. Saul took the devil for Samuel, because he appeared in the mantle of Samuel: so many take common grace for saving, because it is like saving grace; a man may be under a supernatural work, and yet fall short of a saving work; the first raiseth nature, the second only reneweth nature: though every saving work of the Spirit be supernatural, yet every supernatural work of the Spirit is not saving; and hence many deceive their own souls, by taking a supernatural work for a saving work.

Fourthly, Many mistake a profession of religion for a work of conversion, and outside reformation for a sure sign of inward regeneration. If the outside of the cup be washed, then they think all is clean, though it be never so foul within. This is the common rock that so many souls split upon, to their eternal hazard, taking up a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.

Fifthly, Want-of a home application of the law of God to the heart and conscience, to discover to a man the true state and condition he is in. Where this is wanting, a man will sit down short of a true work of grace, and will reckon his case better than it is. That is a notable passage which the apostle hints concerning himself: "I was alive without the law once; but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died." Here you have an account of the different apprehensions Paul had of his condition with and without the word.

1. Here is his apprehension of his condition without the word: "I was alive," saith he, "without the law." Paul had the law, for he was a Pharisee; and they had the "form of knowledge, and of the truth of the law:" therefore, when he saith he was "without the law," you must not take him literally, but spiritually: he was without the power and efficacy of it upon his heart and conscience, convincing, and awakening, and discovering sin; and so long as this was his case, he doubted not of his state—he was confident of the goodness of his condition. This he hinted when he saith, "I was alive;" but then,

2. Here is his apprehension of his condition with the word, and that is quite contrary to what it was before: "when the commandment came," saith he, "then sin revived, and I died." When the word of the Lord came with power upon his soul, when the Spirit of God set it home effectually upon his conscience, that is meant by the coming of the commandment; "then sin revived, and I died;" that is, I saw the desperateness of my case, and the filthiness of all my self-righteousness. Then my hope ceased, and my confidence failed; and, as before, I thought myself alive, and my sin dead; so when God had awakened conscience by the word, then I saw my sin alive and powerful, and myself dead and miserable.

So that this is the first reason why men go no further in the profession of religion, than to be almost Christians. It is because they mistake their state, and think it good when it is not; which mistake is five-fold.

1. A deceitful heart.
2. A proud spirit.
3. Taking common grace for saving.
4. Outward reformation, for true regeneration.
5. Want of home application of the law of God to the heart and conscience.

Reason 2. It is from Satan's cunning, who, if he cannot keep sinners in their open profaneness, then he labours to persuade them to take up with a form of godliness. If he cannot entice them on in their lusts, with a total neglect of heaven, then he entices them to such a profession as is sure to fall short of heaven. He will consent to the leaving some sin, so as we do but keep the rest; and to the doing of some duties, so as we neglect the rest. Nay, rather than part with his interest in the soul, he will yield far to our profession of religion, and consent to any thing but our conversion, and closing with Christ for salvation: he cares not which way we come to hell, so as he gets us but thither at last.

Reason 3. It is from worldly and carnal policy. This is a great hinderance to many: policy many times enters caveats against piety. Jehu will not part with his calves, lest he hazard his kingdom. Among many men there would be more zeal and honesty, were there less design and policy. There is an honest policy that helps religion, but carnal policy hinders it.

We are commanded “to be wise as serpents:” now, “the serpent is the subtlest of creatures:” but then we must be as “innocent as doves.” If piety be without policy, it wants security; if policy be without piety, it wants integrity. Piety without policy is too simple to be safe; and policy without piety is too subtle to be good. Let men be as wise, as prudent, as subtle, as watchful as they will, but then let it be in the way of God; let it be joined with holiness and integrity. That is a cursed wisdom that forbids a man to launch any further out in the depth of religion, than he can see the land, lest he be taken in a storm before he can make safe to shore again.

Reason 4. There are some lusts espoused in the heart, that hinder a hearty close with Christ. Though they bid fair yet they come not to God’s terms: “The young man would have eternal life;” and he bid fair for it: a willing obedience to every command but one, but only one; and will not God abate him one? Is he so severe? Will he not come down a little in his terms, when man rises so high? Must man yield all? Will God yield nothing? No, my brethren, he that underbids for heaven, shall as surely lose it as he that will give nothing for it. He that will not give all he hath—part with all for that “pearl of price”—shall as surely go without it, as he that never once cheapens it. The not coming up to God’s terms is the ruin of thousands of souls; nay, it is that upon which all that perish, do perish. A naked sinner to a naked Christ; a bleeding, broken sinner, to a bleeding, broken Christ—these are God's terms.

Most professors are like iron between two equal loadstones. God draws, and they propend towards God; and the world draws, and they incline to the world. They are between both; they would not leave God for the world, if they might not be engaged to leave the world for God. But if they must part with all—with every lust, every darling, every beloved sin—why, then, the spirit of Demas possesses them, and God is forsaken by them.

My brethren, this is the great reason why many that are come to be almost Christians go no farther. Some one beloved lust or other hinders them, and after a long and high profession, parts them and Christ for ever: they did run well, but here it is that they give out, and after all fall short, and perish to eternity.

Thus having answered these four questions, namely,

1. How far a man may go in the way to heaven, and yet be but almost a Christian.
2. Whence it is that a man goeth so far as to be almost a Christian.
3. When it is that a man is but almost a Christian, when he has gone thus far?
4. What is the reason men go no farther in religion, than to be almost Christians?

I proceed now to the Application.

Inference 1. That salvation is not so easy a thing as it is imagined to be.—This is attested by our Lord Jesus Christ himself: “ Strait is the gate, and narrow is the way that leadeth to life, and few there be that find it.” The gate of conversion is a very strait gate, and yet every man that would be saved eternally, must enter in at this strait gate; for salvation is impossible without it: “ Except a man be born again,” born from above, “ he cannot see the kingdom of God.”

Not that this gate is strait simply, and in respect of itself:—No; for converting grace is free. The gate of mercy stands open all the day long. In the tenders of gospel grace, none are excluded, unless they exclude themselves. Christ doth not say, “ If such and such will come to me, I will ‘not cast them out;’” but “ him that cometh unto me,” be he who or what he will, if he hath a heart to close with me, “ I will in nowise cast him out.” He saith not, “ If this or that man will, here is water of life for him;” but, “ If any man will, let him take the water of life freely.” Christ grudgeth mercy to none; though salvation was dearly purchased for us, yet it is freely proffered us.

So that the gate which leadeth to life is not strait on Christ’s part, or in respect of itself, but it is strait in respect of us, because of our lusts and corruptions, which make the entrance difficult. A needle’s eye is big enough for a thread to pass through, but it is a strait passage for a cable rope:

either the needle's eye must be enlarged, or the cable rope must be untwisted, or the entrance is impossible. So it is in this case—the gate of conversion is a very strait passage for a carnal corrupt sinner to go in at. The soul can never pass through with any one lust beloved and espoused; and, therefore, the sinner must be untwisted from every lust: he must lay aside the love of every sin, or he can never enter in at this gate, for it is a strait gate. And when he is in at this strait gate, he meeteth with a narrow way to walk in: so our Lord Christ saith, “Narrow is the way that leadeth to life;” and what way is this, but the way of sanctification? “For without holiness no man shall ever see the Lord.”

Now this way of sanctification is a very narrow way, for it lies over the neck of every lust, and in the exercise of every grace, subduing the one, and improving the other; dying daily, and yet living daily; dying to sin and living to God:—this is the way of sanctification! And O, how few are there that walk in this way! The broad way hath many travellers in it, but this narrow way is like the ways of Canaan in the days of Shamgar. It is said, “In the days of Shamgar, the son of Anath, the high-ways were unoccupied, and the travellers walked through by-ways.” In the Hebrew, it is, “through crooked ways:” the way of holiness is by the most unoccupied way—so saith the prophet. “A way shall there be, and it shall be called the way of holiness, the unclean shall not pass over it; no lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beasts shall go up thereon; but the redeemed shall walk there.” The unclean, and the lion, and the ravenous beast, they are in the crooked ways: none but the redeemed of the Lord walk in the way of the Lord.

It is no wonder, then, that our Lord Christ saith of life, that “few there be that find it,” when the gate is strait, and the way narrow, that leadeth to it. Many pretend to walk in the narrow way, but they never entered in at the strait gate; and many pretend to have entered in at the strait gate, but they walk not in the narrow way.

It is a very common thing for a man to perish upon a mistake of his way; to go on in those paths that take hold of hell, and yet hope to find heaven at last. Those twenty parts, fore-mentioned, run into destruction, and yet many choose them, and walk in them as the way of salvation. As many profane and open sinners perish by choosing the way of death, so many formal professors perish by mistaking the way of life. This I gather from what our Lord Christ saith—“Few there be that find it;” which doth clearly imply what in Luke xii. 24. he doth plainly express, to wit, that many seek it; many seek to enter in, and yet are not able; many run far, and yet do not “so run as to obtain;” many bid fair for the Pearl of price, and yet go without it. Hell is had with ease; but the “kingdom of heaven suffers violence.”

Inference 2. If many go thus far in the way to heaven, and yet miscarry, O then, what shall be the end of them who fall short of these! If he shall perish who is almost a Christian, what shall he do who is not at all a Christian. If he that owneth

Christ, and professeth Christ, and leaveth many sins for Christ, may be damned notwithstanding; what then shall his doom be that disowneth Christ, and refuseth to part with one sin, one lust, one oath for Christ; nay, that openly blasphemeth the precious name of Christ! If he that is outwardly sanctified shall yet be eternally rejected, what will the case be of such as are openly unsanctified—that have not only the plague of a hard heart within, but also the plague-sore of a profane life without? If the formal professor must be shut out, surely then the filthy adulterer, swinish drunkard, the deep swearer, the profane sabbath-breaker, the foul-mouthed scoffer, yea, and every carnal sinner much more. If there be a wo to him that falleth short of heaven, then how sad is the wo to him who falls short of them that fall short of heaven? Ah, that God would make this an awakening word to sinners that are asleep in sin, without the least fear of death, or dread of damnation!

Use of Examination.

Are there many in the world that are almost and yet but almost Christians? Why, then, “it is time for us to call our condition into question, and to make a more narrow scrutiny into the truth of our spiritual estate;” what it is, whether it be right or not; whether we are sound and sincere in our profession of religion, or not. When our Lord Christ told his disciples, “One of you shall betray me,” every one began presently to reflect upon himself: “Master, is it I? Master, is it I?” So should we do, when the Lord discovers to us from his word, how many there are under the profession of religion that are but almost Christians, we should straightway reflect upon our hearts, “ Lord is it I? Is my heart unsound? Am I but almost a Christian? Am I one of them that shall miscarry at last? Am I a hypocrite under a profession of religion? Have I a form of godliness without the power?”

There are two questions of very great importance, which we should every one of us often put to ourselves:—

What am I?

Where am I?

1. What am I? Am I a child of God or not? Am I sincere in religion, or am I only a hypocrite under a profession?

2. Where am I? Am I yet in a natural state, or a state of grace? Am I yet in the old root, in old Adam; or am I in the root Christ Jesus? Am I in the covenant of works that ministers only wrath and death? or am I in the covenant of grace, that ministers life and peace?

Indeed, this is the first thing a man should look at: there must be a change of state, before there can be a change of heart: we must come under a change of covenant, before we can be under a change of condition; for the new heart and the new spirit is promised in the new covenant. There is nothing of that to be heard of in the old: now a man must be under the new covenant, before he can receive the blessing promised in the new covenant:

he must be in a new covenant-state, before he can receive a new covenant-heart. No mercy, no pardon, no change, no conversion, no grace dispensed out of covenant; therefore this should be our great inquiry; for if we know not where we are, we cannot know what we are; and if we know not what we are, we cannot be what we should be; namely, altogether Christians. Let me then, I beseech you, press this duty upon you that are professors.—Try your own hearts; “examine yourselves whether you are in the faith; prove your own selves.”—I urge this upon most cogent arguments.

1. Because many rest in a notion of godliness and outward shows of religion, and yet remain in their natural condition. Many “are hearers of the word,” but “not doers of it,” “and so deceive their own souls.” Some neither hear nor do; these are profane sinners. Some both hear and do; these are true believers. Some hear, but they do not do; these are hypocritical professors.

He that slights the ordinances cannot be a true Christian; but yet it is possible a man may own them, and profess them, and yet be no true Christian. Who would trust to a profession, that shall see Judas a disciple, an apostle, a preacher of the gospel, one that cast out devils, to be cast out himself? “He is not a Jew who is one outwardly, neither is that circumcision which is outward in the flesh: but he is a Jew which is one inwardly: and circumcision is that of the heart, in the spirit, and not in the letter; whose praise is not of men, but of God.”

2. “Because errors in the first foundation are very dangerous.” If we be not right in the main, in the fundamental work; if the foundation be not laid in grace in the heart, all our following profession comes to nothing: the house is built upon a sandy foundation, and though it may stand for awhile, yet “when the floods come, and the winds blow and beat upon it, great will be the fall of it.”

3. Because many are the deceits that our souls are liable to in this case.” There are many things like grace, that are not grace: now it is the likeness and similitude of things that deceives, and makes one thing to be taken for another. Many take gifts for grace, common knowledge for saving knowledge; when as a man may have great gifts, and yet no grace; great knowledge, and yet not know Jesus Christ.

Some take common faith for saving; whereas, a man may believe all the truths of the gospel, all the promises, all the threatenings, all the articles of the creed, to be true, and yet perish for want of saving grace.

Some take morality and restraining grace for piety and renewing grace; whereas it is common to have sin much restrained, where the heart is not renewed.

Some are deceived with a half work, taking conviction for conversion, reformation for regeneration; we have many mermaid-Christians. Or, like Nebuchadnezzar’s image, head of gold, and feet of clay. The devil cheats most men by a synecdoche, putting a part for the whole: partial obedience to some commands, for universal obedience to all. Endless are the delusions that Satan fastens upon souls, for want of this self-search. It is necessary, therefore, that we try our state, lest we take the shadow for the substance, and embrace a cloud instead of Juno.

4. Satan will try us at one time or other. He will winnow us and sift us to the bottom; and if we now rest in a groundless confidence, it will then end in a comfortless despair. Nay, God himself will search and try us at the day of judgment especially; and who can abide that trial, that never tries his own heart?

5. Whatsoever a man's state be, whether he be altogether a Christian or not, whether his principle be sound or not, yet it is good to examine his own heart. If he find his heart good, his principles right and sound, this will be matter of rejoicing. If he find his heart rotten, his principles false and unsound, the discovery is in order to a renewing. If a man have a disease upon him, and know it, he may send to the physician in time; but what a sad vexation will it be, not to see a disease till it be past cure? So for a man to be graceless, and not see it till it be too late, to think himself a Christian when he is not, and that he is in the right way to heaven, when he is in the ready way to hell, and yet not know it, till a death-bed or a judgment-day confute his confidence—this is the most irrecoverable misery.

These are the grounds upon which I press this duty, of examining our state. O that God would help us in the doing this necessary duty!

Question. You say, “But how shall I come to know whether I am almost or altogether a Christian? If a man may go so far, and yet miscarry, how shall I know when my foundation is right—when I am a Christian indeed?”

Answer 1. The altogether Christian closes with, and accepts of Christ upon gospel-terms. True union makes a true Christian: many close with Christ, but it is upon their own terms; they take him, and own him, but not as God offers him. The terms upon which God in the gospel offers Christ, are, that we shall accept of a broken Christ with a broken heart, and yet a whole Christ with the whole heart. A broken Christ with a broken heart, as a witness of our humility; a whole Christ with a whole heart, as a witness of our sincerity. A broken Christ respects his suffering for sin; a broken heart respects our sense of sin; a whole Christ includes all his offices; a whole heart includes all our faculties. Christ is a King, Priest, and Prophet, and all as Mediator. Without any one of these offices, the work of salvation could not have been completed. As a Priest, he redeems us; as a Prophet, he instructs us; as a King, he sanctifies and saves us. Therefore, the apostle says, "He is made to us of God, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." Righteousness and redemption flow from him, as a Priest; wisdom, as a Prophet; sanctification, as a King.

Now many embrace Christ as a Priest, but yet they own him not as a King and Prophet; they like to share in his righteousness, but not to partake of his holiness; they would be redeemed by him, but they would not submit to him; they would be saved by his blood, but not submit to his power. Many love the privileges of the gospel, but not the duties of the gospel. Now these are but almost Christians, notwithstanding their close with Christ; for it is upon their own terms, but not upon God's. The offices of Christ may be distinguished, but they can never be divided. But the true Christian owns Christ in all his offices: he doth not only close with him as Jesus, but as Lord Jesus: he says with Thomas, "My Lord, and my God." He doth not only believe in the merit of his death, but also conforms to the manner of his life. As he believes in him, so he lives to him: he takes him for his wisdom, as well as for his righteousness; for his sanctification, as well as his redemption.

2. The altogether Christian hath a thorough work of grace and sanctification wrought in the heart, as a spring of duties. Regeneration is a whole change; "all old things are done away, and all things become new." It is a perfect work, as to parts, though not as to degrees. Carnal men do duties, but they are from an unsanctified heart, and that spoils all. A new piece of cloth never doth well in an old garment, for the rent is but made worse. When a man's heart is thoroughly renewed by grace, the mind savingly enlightened, the conscience thoroughly convinced, the will truly humbled and subdued, the affections spiritually raised and sanctified; and when mind, and will, and conscience, and affections, all join issue to help on with the performance of the duties commanded; then is a man altogether a Christian.

3. He that is altogether a Christian, looks to the manner, as well as to the matter, of his duties. Not only that they be done, but how they be done. He knows the Christian's privileges lie in pronouns, but his duty in adverbs: it must not be only bonum, good, but it must be bene, that good must be rightly done.

Here the almost Christian fails, he doth the same duties that others do for the matter, but he doth them not in the same manner; while he minds the substance, he regards not the circumstance; if he pray, he regards not faith and fervency in prayer; if he hear, he doth not mind Christ's rule, "Take heed how you hear;" if he obey, he looks not to the frame of his heart in obeying, and therefore miscarries in all he doth: any of these defects spoil the good of every duty.

4. "The altogether Christian is known by his sincerity, in all his performances." Whatever a man does in the duties of the gospel, he cannot be a Christian without sincerity. Now, the almost Christian fails in this; for though he doth much, prays much, hears much, obeys much, yet he is a hypocrite under all.

5. He that is altogether a Christian, hath an "answerableness within to the law without." There is a connaturalness between the word of God and the will of a Christian; his heart is, as it were, the transcript of the law; the same holiness that is commanded in his word, is implanted in the heart; the same conformity to Christ, that is enjoined by the word of God, is wrought in the soul by the Spirit of God; the same obedience which the word requireth of him, the Lord enableth him to perform, by his grace bestowed on him. This is that which is promised in the new covenant: "I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts. Now the writing his law in us, is nothing else but his working that grace and holiness in us which the law commandeth and requireth of us.

In the old-covenant administration, God wrote his laws only upon tables of stone, but not upon the heart; and therefore, though God wrote them, yet they broke them; but in the new-covenant administration, God provides new tables: not tables of stone, but “the fleshly tables of the heart,” and writes his laws there, that there might be a law within, answerable to the law without. And this every true Christian hath. So that he may say in his measure, as our Lord Christ did, “I delight to do thy will, O my God; thy law is within my heart.” Every believer hath a light within him, not guiding him to despise and slight, but to prize and walk by the light without him; the word commands him to walk in the light, and the light directs him to walk according to the word. Moreover, from this impression of the law upon the heart, obedience and conformity to God becomes the choice and delight of the soul; for holiness is the very nature of the new creature; so that if there were no scripture, no Bible to guide him, yet he would be holy, for he hath received “grace for grace;” there is a grace within to answer to the word of grace without. Now, the almost Christian is a stranger to this law of God within; he may have some conformity to the word in outward conversation, but he cannot have this answerableness to the word in inward constitution.

6. The altogether Christian is much in duty, and yet much above duty: much in duty, in regard of performances, much above duty, in regard of dependance; much in duty by obeying; but much above duty by believing. He lives in his obedience, but he doth not live upon his obedience, but upon Christ and his righteousness. The almost Christian fails in this. He is much in duty, but not above it, but rests in it; he works for rest, and he rests in his works. He cannot come to believe and obey too; if he believes, then he thinks there is no need of obedience, and so casts off that; if he be much in obedience, then he casts off believing, and thinks there is no need of that. He cannot say with David, "I have hoped for thy salvation, and done thy commandments." The more a man is in duty, and the more above it; the more in doing, and more in believing, the more a Christian.

7. "He that is altogether a Christian is universal in his obedience." He doth not obey one command and neglect another, do one duty and cast off another; but he hath respect to all the commands, he endeavours to leave every sin, and love every duty.

The almost Christian fails in this, his obedience is partial and piece-meal; if he obeys one command, he breaks another; the duties that least cross his lust, he is much in; but those that do, he lays aside.

The Pharisees "fasted, prayed, paid tithes," &c. but they did not lay aside their covetousness, their oppression; they "devoured widows' houses," they were unnatural to parents.

8. "The altogether Christian makes God's glory the chief end of all his performances." If he pray, or hear, or give, or fast, or repent, or obey, &c. God's glory is the main end of all. It is true, he may have somewhat else at the hither end of his work, but God is at the further end: as Moses's rod swallowed up the magicians' rods, so God's glory is the ultimate end that swallows up all his other ends. Now the almost Christian fails in this, his ends are corrupt and selfish; God may possibly be at the hither end of his work, but self is at the other end; for he that was never truly cast out of himself, can have no higher end than himself.

Now then examine thyself by these characters, put the question to thy own soul. Dost thou close with Christ upon gospel terms? Is grace in the heart the principle of thy performances? Dost thou look to the manner, as well as the matter of thy duties? Dost thou do all in sincerity? Is there an answerableness within to the law without? Art thou much above duty, when much in duty? Is thy obedience universal? Lastly, is God's glory the end of all? If so, then thou art not only almost but altogether a Christian.

Second Use of Caution.—"O take heed of being almost, and yet but almost a Christian!" It is a great complaint of God against Ephraim, that "he is a cake not turned;" that is, half baked, neither raw nor roasted, neither cold nor hot, as Laodicea: "Because thou art neither hot nor cold, therefore I will spew thee out of my mouth."

This is a condition that of all others is greatly unprofitable, exceedingly uncomfortable, and desperately dangerous.

First, "It is greatly unprofitable to be but almost a Christian;" for failing in any one point, will ruin us as surely as if we had never made any attempts for heaven. It is no advantage to the soul to be almost converted; for the little that we want, spoils the good of all our attainments. We say, as good never a whit as never the near; there is no profit in leaving this or that sin, unless we leave all sin. Herod heard John gladly, and did many things, but he kept his Herodias, and that ruined him. Judas did many things, prayed much, preached much, professed much, but yet his covetousness spoiled all; one sin ruined the young man, that had kept all the commands but one. Thus he "that offends in one point, is guilty of all." That is, that lives wilfully and allowedly in any one sin, he brings the guilt of the violation of the whole law of God upon his soul, and that upon a twofold account.

1. Because he manifests the same contempt of the authority of God, in the wilful breach of one, as of all.

2. By allowing himself in the breach of any one command he shows he kept none in obedience and conscience to God; for he that hates sin as sin, hates all sin, and he that obeys the command as the express will of God, obeys every command. And for this cause the least sin, wilfully, and with allowance lived in, spoils the good of all our obedience and lays the soul under the whole wrath of God. One leak in a ship will sink her, though she be tight every way else. "Gideon had seventy sons," and but one bastard, and yet that one bastard destroyed all his sons; so may one sin spoil all our services; one lust beloved may spoil all our profession, as that one bastard slew all the sons of Gideon.

Secondly, "It is exceedingly uncomfortable;" as appears three ways.

1. "In that such a one is hated of God and men." The world hates him because of his profession, and God abhors him because of his dissimulation; the world hates him because he seems good, and God hates him because he doth but seem so. No person that God hates more than the almost Christian: "I would that thou wert either cold or hot;" either all a Christian, or not at all a Christian. "Because thou art neither cold nor hot, therefore I will spew thee out of my mouth." What a loathsome expression doth God here use, to show what an utter abhorrency there is in him against lukewarm Christians! How uncomfortable then must that condition needs be wherein a man is abhorred both of God and man?

2. "It is uncomfortable in regard of sufferings." For being almost a Christian, will bring us into suffering; but being but almost a Christian, will never carry us through suffering. In Matt. xiii. 20, 21. it is said, "He that receiveth the seed into stony ground, the same is he that hears the word, and with joy receives it; yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while; for when tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, by-and-by he is offended.”

There are four things observable in these words.

1. That the stony ground may receive the word with joy.

2. That it may for some time abide in a profession of it: He dureth for a while.

3. That this profession will expose to suffering; for mark, persecution is said to arise because of the word.

4. This suffering will cause an apostatizing from profession; for that which is here called “offence,” is in Luke viii. 13. called falling away: “which for a while believe, and in time of temptation fall away.”

I gather hence, a profession may expose a man as much to suffering as the power of godliness: but without the power of godliness there is no holding out in a profession under suffering. The world hates the show of godliness, and therefore persecutes it; the almost Christian wants the substance, and therefore cannot hold out in it.

Now this must needs be very uncomfortable; if I profess religion, I am like to suffer; if I do but profess it, I am never like to endure.

3. “It is uncomfortable, in regard of that deceit it lays our hopes under;” to be deceived of our hopes causeth sorrow as well as shame. He that is but almost a Christian, hopes for heaven; but unless he be altogether a Christian, he shall never come there. Now to perish with hopes of heaven, to go to hell by the gates of glory, to come to the very door, and then be shut out, as the five virgins were; to die in the wilderness, within the sight of the promised land, at the very brinks of Jordan; this must needs be sad. To come within a stride of the goal, and yet miss it; to sink within sight of harbour; O how uncomfortable is this!

4. "As it is greatly unprofitable, and exceedingly uncomfortable, to be but almost a Christian, so it is desperately dangerous." For,

1. "This hinders the true work:" A man lies in a fairer capacity for conversion, that lies in open enmity and rebellion, than he that sooths up himself in the formalities of religion. This I gather from the parable of the two sons which our Lord Christ urged to the professing Scribes and Pharisees. "There was a man had two sons; and he came to one, and said, Go work to day in my vineyard. He said, I will not; but afterwards repented and went. And he came to the second, and said likewise; and he said, I go, Sir; but went not." The first represents the carnal open sinner, that is called by the word, but refuses, yet afterwards repents, and believes. The second represents the hypocritical professor, that pretends much, but performs little. Now mark how Christ applies this parable: "Verily I say unto you, that the publicans and the harlots go into the kingdom of God before you."

And upon this account it is better not to be at all, than to be almost a Christian; for the almost hinders the altogether. It is better, in this regard, to be a sinner without a profession, than to be a professor without conversion: for the one lies fairer for an inward change, when the other rests in an outward. Our Lord Christ tells the Scribe, "Thou art not far from the kingdom of God," yet never like to come there. None farther from the kingdom of God, than such as are not far from the kingdom of God. As for instance, when there lies but one lust, one sin between a soul and Christ, that soul is not far from Christ: but now, when the soul rests in this nearness to Christ, and yet will not part with that one lust for Christ, but thinks his condition secured, though that lust be not subdued; who is farther from the kingdom of God than he? So our Lord Christ tells the young man, "One thing thou lackest." Why he was very near heaven, near being a Christian altogether, he was very near being saved; he tells Christ he had kept all the commands. He lacked but one thing; I say, but one thing: but it was a great thing. That one thing he lacked was more than all things he had, for it was the one thing necessary; it was a new heart, a work of grace in his soul, a change of state, a heart weaned from the world. This was the one thing, and he that lacks this one thing, perishes with his all things else.

2. "This condition is so like a state of grace, that the mistake of it for grace is easy and common;" and it is very dangerous to mistake any thing for grace that is not grace; for in that a man contents himself, as if it were grace. Formality doth often dwell next door to sincerity, and one sign serves both; and so the house may be easily mistaken, and by that means a man may take up his lodging there, and never find the way out again.

What one saith of wisdom, (many might have been wise, had they not thought themselves so when they were otherwise) the same I may say of grace; many a formal professor might have been a sincere believer, had he not mistook his profession for conversion, his duties for grace, and so rested in that for sincerity that is but hypocrisy.

3. "It is a degree of blasphemy to pretend to grace, and yet have no grace." I gather this from Rev. ii. 9.—"I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not." This place undergoes variety of constructions; Grotius and Paræus do not make their blasphemy to lie in their saying they are Jews, and are not; but to lie in the reproaches that these Jews fastened upon Christ, calling him impostor, deceiver, one that hath a devil, &c. Brightman goes another way, and saith, this was the blasphemy of these Jews, they retained that way of worship that was abrogated, and thrust upon God those old rites and ceremonies which Jesus Christ had abolished, and nailed to his cross, by which they overthrew the glory of Christ, and denied his coming. But I conceive the blasphemy of these Jews to lie in this, that they said they were Jews and were not. A Jew here is not to be taken literally and strictly only, for one of the lineage of Abraham, but it is to be taken metonymically for a true believer, one of the spiritual seed of Abraham: "He is a Jew who is one inwardly;" so that for a man to say he is a Jew when he is not, to profess an interest in Christ when he hath none, to say he hath grace when he hath none, this Christ calls blasphemy.

But why should Christ call this blasphemy? This is hypocrisy; but how may it be said to be blasphemy? Why, he blasphemeth the great attribute of God's omniscieny, he doth implicitly deny that God sees and knows our hearts and thoughts; for if a man did believe the omniscieny of God, that he searches the heart, and sees and knows all within, he would not dare to rest in a graceless profession of godliness. This, therefore, is blasphemy in the account of Christ.

4. "It is dangerous to be almost a Christian, in that this stills and serves to quiet conscience." Now it is very dangerous to quiet conscience with any thing but the blood of Christ: it is bad being at peace, till Christ speak peace. Nothing can truly pacify conscience less than that which pacifies God, and that is the blood of the Lord Christ. Now the almost Christian quiets conscience, but not with the blood of Christ: it is not a peace flowing from Christ's propitiation, but a peace rising from a formal profession, not a peace of Christ's giving, but a peace of his own making; he silences and bridles conscience with a form of godliness, and so makes it give way to an undoing, soul-destroying peace; he rocks it asleep in the cradle of duties, and then it is a thousand to one it never awaketh more till death or judgment.

Ah, my brethren, it is better to have conscience never quiet, than quieted any way but by “the blood of sprinkling:” a good conscience unquiet, is the greatest affliction to saints; and an evil conscience quiet, is the greatest judgment to sinners.

5. “It is dangerous to be almost a Christian, in respect of the unpardonable sin.” The sin that the scripture saith, “can never be forgiven, neither in this world nor in the world to come;” I mean the sin against the Holy Ghost. Now such are only capable of sinning that sin as are but almost Christians. A true believer cannot, the work of grace in his heart, that seed of God which abideth in him, secures him against it.

The profane, ignorant, open sinner cannot; though he live daily and hourly in sin, yet he cannot commit this sin, for it must be from an enlightened mind. Every sinner, under the gospel, especially sins sadly against the Holy Ghost, against the strivings and motions of the Spirit: he “resists the Holy Ghost;” but yet this is not the sin against the Holy Ghost.

There must be three ingredients to make up that sin.

1st, It must be wilful. “If we sin wilfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remains no more sacrifice for sin.”

2d, “It must be against light and conviction, after we have received the knowledge of the truth.”

3d, It must be in resolved malice. Now you shall find all these ingredients in the sin of the Pharisees, Matt. xii. 22. Christ heals one that was “possessed with a devil;” a great work, which all the people wondered at, verse 23. But what say the Pharisees? see verse 24. “This fellow casteth out devils by the prince of devils.” Now that this was the sin against the Holy Ghost, is clear; for it was both wilful and malicious, and against clear convictions. They could not but see that he was the Son of God, and that this work was a peculiar work of the Spirit of God in him; and yet they say, he wrought by the devil! whereupon Christ charges them with this “sin against the Holy Ghost,” verse 31, 32, 33.* Now the Pharisees were a sort of great professors; whence I gather this conclusion, that it is the professor of religion that is the subject of this sin; not the open carnal sinner, not the true believer, but the formal professor. Not the sinner, for he hath neither light nor grace; not the believer, for he hath both light and grace; therefore the formal professor, for he hath light but no grace. Here then, is the great danger of being almost a Christian—he is liable to this dreadful unpardonable sin.

6. “The being but almost a Christian, subjects us to apostacy.” He that gets no good by walking in the ways of God, will quickly leave them and walk no more in them. This I gather from Hosea xiv. 9. “Who is wise, and he shall understand these things? prudent, and he shall know them?”

* Compare this with Mark iii. 28, 29, 30.

for the ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them, but the transgressors shall fall therein.”

“The just shall walk in them.” He whose heart is renewed and made right with God, he shall keep close to God in his ways.

“But the transgressor shall fall therein.” The word in the Hebrew is peshangim, from a word that signifies to prevaricate: so that we may read the words thus, “The ways of the Lord are right, and the just shall walk in them; but he that prevaricates, (that is, a hypocrite) in the ways of God, he shall fall therein.”

An unsound heart will never hold out long in the ways of God: “He was a burning and a shining light, and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in that light.”

“For a season”—For an hour, a short space, and then they left him. It is a notable question Job puts concerning the hypocrite—“Will he delight himself in the Almighty? will he always call upon God?”

He may do much, but those two things he cannot do:

1. He cannot make God his delight.
2. He cannot persevere in duties at all times, and in all conditions.

He will be an apostate at last: the scab of hypocrisy usually breaks out in the plague-sore of apostacy. Conversion ground is standing ground; it is terra firma; but a graceless profession of religion is a slippery ground, and falling ground;

Julian the apostate, was first Julian the professor. I know it is possible a believer may fall, but yet "he rises again, the everlasting arms are underneath;" but when the hypocrite fails, who shall help him up? Solomon saith, "Wo to him that is alone when he falls!" that is without interest in Christ. Why wo to him? "For he hath none to help him up." If Jesus Christ do not recover him, who can? David fell and was restored, for he had one to help him up; but Judas fell and perished, for he was alone.

7. "This being but almost a Christian, provokes God to bring dreadful spiritual judgments upon a man.

Barrenness is a spiritual judgment: now this provokes God to give us up to barrenness. When Christ found the fig-tree that had leaves but no fruit, he pronounces the curse of barrenness upon it: "Never fruit grow on thee more." And so Ezek. xlvii. 11. "The miry places thereof, and the marshy places thereof, shall not be healed; they shall be given to salt."

A spirit of delusion is a sad judgment. Why, this is the almost Christian's judgment; that receives the truth, but not in the love of it: "Because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved; for this cause God shall send them strong delusions."

To lose either light or sight, either ordinances or eyes, is a great spiritual judgment. Why, this is the almost Christian's judgment: he that profits not under the means, provokes God to take away either light or sight; either the ordinances from before his eyes, or else to bind his eyes under the ordinances.

To have a hard heart, is a dreadful judgment, and there is no hypocrite but he hath a hard heart.

My brethren, it is a dreadful thing for God to give a man up to spiritual judgments! Now this being almost a Christian, provokes God to give a man up to spiritual judgments: surely, therefore, it is a very dangerous thing to be almost a Christian!

8. "Being almost and but almost Christians, will exceedingly aggravate our damnation." The higher a man rises under the means, the lower he falls if he miscarries: he that falls but a little short of heaven, will fall deepest into hell; he that hath been nearest to conversion, being not converted, shall have the deepest damnation when he is judged. Capernaum's sentence shall exceed Sodom's for severity; because she exceeded Sodom in the enjoyment of mercy—she received more from God, she knew more of God, she professed much for God, and yet was not right with God; therefore, she shall be punished more by God. The higher the rise, the greater the fall; the higher the profession, the lower the damnation. He miscarrieth with a light in his hand: he perisheth under many convictions; and convictions never end but in a sound conversion, as in all saints; or in a sad damnation, as in all hypocrites. Praying-ground, hearing-ground, professing-ground, and conviction-ground, is, of all, the worst ground to perish upon.

Now then, to sum up all under this head.

If to be almost a Christian hinders the true work of conversion; if it be easily mistaken for conversion; if it be a degree of blasphemy; if this be that which quiets conscience; if this subjects a man to commit the unpardonable sin; if it lays us liable to apostacy; if it provokes God to give us up to spiritual judgments; and if it be that which exceedingly aggravates our damnation; sure then it is a very dangerous thing to be almost and but almost a Christian!

O labour to be altogether Christians, to go farther than they who have gone farthest, and yet fall short! This is the great counsel of the Holy Ghost, “So run that ye may obtain.—Give diligence to make your calling and election sure.”

Need you any motives to quicken you up to this important duty?

Consideration 1. “This is that which is not only commanded by God, but that whereunto all the commands of God tend.” A perfect conformity of heart and life to God, is the sum and substance of all the commands both of the Old and the New Testament. As the harlot was for the dividing of the child, so Satan is for dividing the heart. He would have our love and affections shared between Christ and our lusts; for he knows that Christ reckons we love him not at all, unless we love him above all. But God will have all or none: “My son, give me thy heart.—Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy might.” Look into the Scripture, and see what that is upon which you only stand, and you shall find that God hath fixed it upon those great duties which alone tend to the perfection of your state as Christians. God hath fixed your only upon believing; only believe. God hath fixed your only upon obedience: “Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve.” “Only let your conversation be such as becometh the gospel of Christ.” So that your only is fixed by God upon these two great duties of believing and obeying; both which tend to the perfection of your state as Christians. Now, shall God command, and shall not we obey? Can there be a higher motive to duty than the authority of the great God, whose will is the eternal rule of righteousness? “O let us fear God, and keep his commandments;” for this is the whole duty of man!

Consideration 2. “The Lord Christ is a Saviour throughout, a perfect and complete Mediator.” He hath not shed his blood by halves, nor satisfied the justice of God, and redeemed sinners by halves. No! but he went through with his undertaking; he bore all our sins, and shed all his blood: he died to the utmost, satisfied the justice of God to the utmost, redeemed sinners to the utmost, and now that he is in heaven he intercedeth to the utmost, and is able to save to the utmost.

It is observed, that our Lord Christ, when he was upon the earth, in the days of his flesh, he wrought no half-cures; but whomsoever they brought to him for healing, he healed them throughout: “They brought unto him all that were diseased, and besought him that they might only touch the hem of his garment, and as many as touched were made perfectly whole.”

O what an excellent physician is here! none like him! he cureth infallibly, suddenly, and perfectly!

He cureth infallibly. None ever came to him for healing that went without it; he never practised upon any that miscarried under his hand.

He cureth suddenly. No sooner is his garment touched, but his patient is healed. The leper, Matt. viii. 3. is no sooner touched, but immediately cured; the two blind men, Matt. xx. 34. are no sooner touched, but their eyes were immediately opened.

He cureth perfectly: “As many as were touched, were made perfectly whole.”

Now all this was to show what a perfect and complete Saviour Jesus Christ would be to all sinners that would come to him. They should find healing in his blood, virtue in his righteousness, and pardon for all their sins, whatever they were. Look! as Christ healed all the diseases of all that came to him, when he was on earth, so he pardons all the sins, and healeth all the wounds of all those souls that come to him, now he is in heaven. He is a Saviour throughout; and shall not we be saints throughout? Shall he be altogether a Redeemer; and shall not we be altogether believers? O, what a shame is this!

Consideration 3. “There is enough in religion to engage us to be altogether Christians;” and that whether we respect profit or comfort, for grace brings both.

First, "Religion is a gainful thing;" and this is a compelling motive that becomes effectual upon all. Gain is the god whom the world worships. What will not men do, what will they not suffer for gain? What journeys do men take by land, what voyages by sea, through hot and cold, through fair and foul, through storm and shine, through day and night, and all for gain! Now there is no calling so gainful as this of religion; it is the most profitable employment we can take up. "Godliness is profitable unto all things." It is a great revenue. If it be closely followed, it brings in the greatest income. Indeed, some men are religious for the world's sake; such shall be sure not to gain: but they who are religious for religion's sake, shall be sure not to lose, if heaven and earth can recompense them; for "godliness hath the promise both of the life that now is, and of that which is to come."

Ah, who would not be a Christian, when the gain of godliness is so great! Many gain much in their worldly calling, but the profit which the true believer hath from one hour's communion with God in Christ, weigheth down all the gain of the world. "Cursed be that man who counts all the gain of the world worth one hour's communion with Jesus Christ," saith that noble Marquis, Galeacius Caracciola. It is no where said in Scripture, "Happy is the man that findeth silver, and the man that getteth fine gold." These are of no weight in the balance of the sanctuary; but it is said, "Happy is the man that findeth wisdom, and the man that getteth understanding; for the merchandise of it is better than the merchandise of silver, and the gain thereof than fine gold." By wisdom and understanding here, we are to understand the grace of Christ; and so the spirit of God interpreteth it. "Behold the fear of the Lord, that is wisdom; and to depart from evil is understanding." Now of all merchants, he that trades in this wisdom and understanding will prove the richest man: one grain of godliness outweigheth all the gold of Ophir. There is no riches like being rich in grace: for,

1. This is the most necessary riches; other things are not so. Silver and gold are not so: we may be happy without them. There is but one thing necessary, and that is the grace of Jesus Christ in the heart. Have this, and have all; want this, and want all.

2. It is the most substantial gain. The things of this world are more shadow than substance. Pleasure, honour, and profit, comprehend all things in this world, and therefore are the carnal man's trinity. The apostle John calls them "the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life;" this (saith he) is all that is in the world: and truly, if this be all, all is nothing; for what is pleasure but a dream and conceit? what is honour, but fancy and opinion? and what is profit, but a thing of nought? "Why wilt thou set thine eyes upon that which is not?" The things of the world have in them no sound substance, though foolish carnal men call them substance. But now grace is a substantial good; so our Lord Christ calls it: "That I may cause those that love me to inherit substance," to inherit that which is. Grace is a reality: other things are but show and fancy.

3. Godliness is the safest gain. The gain of worldly things is always with difficulty, but seldom with safety. The soul is often hazarded in the over-eager pursuit of worldly things; nay, thousands do pawn, and lose, and damn their precious souls eternally, for a little silver and gold, which are but the guts and garbage of the earth: "and what is a man profited, to gain the whole world, if he lose his own soul?" But the gain of godliness is ever with safety to the soul; nay, the soul is lost and undone without it, and not saved but by the attainment of it. A soul without grace is in a lost and perishing condition: the hazard of eternity is never over with us until the grace of Christ Jesus be sought by us, and wrought in us.

4. "Godliness is the surest profit:" as it is safe, so it is sure. Men make great ventures for the world, but all runs upon uncertainty. Many venture much, and wait long, and yet find no return but disappointment: they sow much, and yet reap nothing. But the gain of godliness is sure; "to him that soweth righteousness shall be a sure reward."

And as the things of this world are uncertain in the getting; so they are uncertain in the keeping. If men do not undo us, moths may; if robbery doth not, rust may; if rust doth not, fire may; to which all earthly treasures are incident, as our Lord Christ teaches us, Matt. vi. 19. Solomon limneth the world with wings: "Riches make themselves wings, and fly as an eagle towards heaven." A man may be rich as Dives to-day, and yet poor as Lazarus to-morrow. O how uncertain are all worldly things! But now the true treasure of grace is in the heart, that can never be lost. It is out of the reach both of rust and robber. "He that gets the world, gets a good he can never keep; but he that gets grace, gets a good he shall never lose."

5. "The profit of godliness lieth not only in this world, but in the world to come." All other profit lieth in this world only: riches and honour, &c. are called this world's goods, but the riches of godliness is chiefly in the other world's goods; in the enjoyment of God, and Jesus Christ, and the Holy Spirit, among saints and angels in glory. Lo, this is the gain of godliness; "such honour have all his saints."

6. "The gain of godliness is a durable and eternal gain." All this world's goods are perishing; perishing pleasures, perishing honours, perishing profits, and perishing comforts. "Riches are not for ever," saith Job: "Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow?" Gregory upon these words observes, that earthly treasures are treasures of snow. What pains do children take to scrape and roll the snow together to make a snow-ball, which is no sooner done, but the heat of the sun dissolves it, and it comes to nothing. Why, the treasures of worldly men are but treasures of snow. When death and judgment come, they melt away, and come to nothing. "Riches profit not in the day of wrath, but righteousness delivers from death."

You see here the great advantage of godliness; so that if we look at profit, we shall find enough in religion to engage us to be altogether Christians. Or,

2. "If we look at comfort," religion is the most comfortable profession." There are no comforts to be compared to the comforts of grace and godliness.

1. "Worldly comfort is only outward;" it is but skin-deep: "In the midst of laughter the heart is sorrowful." But now the comfort that flows from godliness is an inward comfort, a spiritual joy; therefore it is called gladness of heart. "Thou hast put gladness in my heart:" other joy smooths the brow, but this fills the breast.

2. "Worldly comfort hath a nether spring." The spring of worldly comfort is in the creature, in some earthly enjoyment; and, therefore, the comfort of worldly men must needs be mixed and muddy: "an unclean fountain cannot send forth pure water." But spiritual comfort hath an upper spring: the comfort that accompanies godliness, flows from the manifestations of the love of God in Christ, from the workings of the blessed Spirit in the heart, which is first a counsellor, and then a comforter: and therefore the comforts of the saints must needs be pure and unmixed comforts; for they flow from a pure spring.

3. "Worldly comfort is very fading and transitory." "The triumphing of the wicked is but short, and the joy of the hypocrite is but for a moment.” Solomon compares it to the “crackling of thorns under a pot,” which is but a blaze, and soon out: so is the comfort of carnal hearts. But now the comfort of godliness is a durable and abiding comfort; “your heart shall rejoice, and your joy no man shall take from you.” The comfort of godliness is lasting, and everlasting: it abides by us in life, in death, and after death.

First, “It abides by us in life:” grace and peace go together. Godliness naturally brings forth comfort and peace: “The effect of righteousness shall be peace.” It is said of the primitive Christians, “They walked in the fear of the Lord, and in the comfort of the Holy Ghost.” Every duty done in uprightness and sincerity, reflects some comfort upon the soul. “In keeping the commands, there is great reward;” not only for keeping of them, but in keeping of them. As every flower, so every duty carries sweetness and refreshing with it.

Objection. “But who more dejected and disconsolate than saints and believers? whose lives are more uncomfortable? whose mouths are more filled with complaints, than theirs? If a condition of godliness and Christianity be a condition of so much comfort, then why are they thus?”

Solution. That the people of God are oftentimes without comfort, I grant: “They may walk in the dark, and have no light.” But this is none of the products of godliness: grace brings forth no such fruit as this; there is a threefold rise and spring of it:—Sin within, Desertion and Temptation without.

1. Sin within. The saints of God are not all spirit, and no flesh; all grace, and no sin. They are made up of contrary principles: there is light and darkness in the same mind; sin and grace in the same will; carnal and spiritual in the same affections; there is “the flesh lusting against the Spirit.” In all these, and too oft the Lord knows, is the believer led away captive by these warring lusts. So was the holy apostle himself: “I find then a law, that, when I would do good, evil is present with me. I see another law in my members, warring against the law of my mind, and bringing me into captivity to the law of sin;”—and this was that which broke his spiritual peace, and filled his soul with trouble and complaints, as you see: “O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from this body of death?” So that it is sin that interrupts the peace of God’s people. Indwelling lust, stirring and breaking forth, must needs cause trouble and grief in the soul of a believer; for it is as natural for sin to bring forth trouble, as it is for grace to bring forth peace. Every sin contracts a new guilt upon the soul, and guilt provokes God; and where there is a sense of guilt contracted, and God provoked, there can be no peace, no quiet in that soul, till faith procures fresh sprinklings of the blood of Jesus Christ upon the conscience.

2. “Another spring of the believer’s trouble and disconsolateness of spirit, is the desertions of God;” and this follows upon the former. God doth sometimes disappear, and hide himself from his people: "Verily, thou art a God that hideth thyself." But the cause of God's hiding, is the believer's sinning: "Your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you." In heaven, where there is no sinning, there is no losing the light of God's countenance for a moment; and if saints here could serve God without corruption, they should enjoy God without desertion; but this cannot be. While we are in this state, remaining lusts will stir and break forth, and then God will hide his face; and this must needs be trouble: "Thou didst hide thy face, and I was troubled."

The light of God's countenance, shining upon the soul, is the Christian's heaven on this side heaven; and therefore it is no wonder if the hiding of his face be looked upon by the soul, as one of the days of hell. So it was by David: "The sorrows of death compassed me, the pains of hell gat hold upon me; I found trouble and sorrow."

3. "A third spring of that trouble and complaint that brims the banks of the Christian's spirit, is the temptations of Satan." He is the great enemy of saints, and he envieth the quiet and comfort that their hearts are filled with, when his conscience is brimmed with horror and terror; and, therefore, though he knows that he cannot destroy their peace, yet he labours to disturb their peace. As the blessed Spirit of God is first a sanctifier, and then a comforter, working grace in order to peace; so this cursed spirit of hell is first a tempter, and then a troublers; first persuading to act sin, and then accusing for sin; and this is his constant practice upon the spirits of God's people. He cannot endure that they should live in the light of God's countenance, when himself is doomed to eternal, intolerable darkness.

And thus you see whence it is that the people of God are often under trouble and complaint. All arises from these three springs of Sin within, Desertions and Temptations without.

If the saints could serve God without sinning, and enjoy God without withdrawing, and resist Satan without yielding, they might enjoy peace and comfort without sorrowing. This must be endeavoured constantly here, but it will never be attained fully but in heaven. But yet so far as grace is the prevailing principle in the heart, and so far as the power of godliness is exercised in this life; so far the condition of a child of God is a condition of peace; for it is an undoubted truth, that the fruit of righteousness shall be peace. But suppose the people of God experience little of this comfort in this life, yet,

2. "They find it in the day of death." Grace and holiness will minister unto us then, and that ministration will be peace. A believer hath a two-fold spring of comfort, each one emptying itself into his soul in a dying season: one is from above him, the other is from within him. The spring that runs comfort from above him, is the blood of Christ sprinkled upon the conscience; the spring that runs comfort from within him, is the sincerity of his heart in God's service. When we lie upon a death-bed, and can reflect upon our principles and performances in the service of God, and there find uprightness and sincerity of heart running through all, this must needs be comfort. It was so to Hezekiah: "Remember, O Lord, how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart; and have done that which is good in thy sight."

Nothing maketh a death-bed so uneasy and hard, as a life spent in the service of sin and lust; nothing makes a death-bed so soft and sweet, as a life spent in the service of God and Christ. Or put the case, the people of God should not meet with this comfort then; yet,

3. "They shall be sure to find it after death." If time bring none of this fruit to ripeness, yet eternity shall; grace in time will be glory in eternity; holiness now will be happiness then: "Whatever it is a man soweth in this world, that he shall be sure to reap in the next world: he that soweth to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit, shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." When sin shall end in sorrow and misery, holiness shall end in joy and glory: "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." Whoever shareth in the grace of Christ in this world, shall share in the joys of Christ in the world to come; and that joy "is joy unspeakable, and full of glory." Lo, here is the fruit of godliness. Say now, if there be not enough in religion, whether we respect profit or comfort, to engage us to be Christians throughout?

Consideration 4. “What an entire resignation wicked men make of themselves to their lusts! and shall not we do so to the Lord Christ?” They give up themselves without reserve to the pleasures of sin; and shall we have our reserves in the service of God? They are altogether sinners; and shall not we be altogether saints? They run, and faint not, in the service of their lusts; and shall we faint, and not run, in the service of Christ? Shall the servants of corruption have their ears bored to the door-posts of sin, in token of an entire and perpetual service, and shall we not give up ourselves to the Lord Christ, to be his for ever? Shall others make a “covenant with hell and death,” and shall not we “join ourselves to God in an everlasting covenant that cannot be forgotten?” Shall they take more pains to damn their souls, than we do to save ours? and make more speed to a place of vengeance, than we do to a crown of righteousness? Which do you judge best, to be saved everlastingly, or to perish everlastingly? Which do you count the best master, God or the devil? Christ or your lusts? I know you will determine it on Christ’s side. O then! when others serve their lusts with all their hearts, do you serve Christ with all your hearts. “If the hearts of the sons of men be fully set in them to do evil, then much more let the hearts of the sons of God be fully set in them to do good.

Consideration 5. “If ye be not altogether Christians, ye will never be able to appear with comfort before God, nor to stand in the judgment of the last and great day.” For this sad dilemma will silence every hypocrite: If my commands were not holy, just, and good, why didst thou own them? If they were holy, just, and good, why dost thou not obey them? If Jesus Christ was not worth the having, why didst thou profess him? If he was, then why didst thou not cleave to him, and close with him? If my ordinances were not appointed to convert and save souls, why didst thou sit under them, and rest in the performance of them? Or if they were, then why didst thou not submit to the power of them? If religion be not good, why dost thou profess it? If it be good, why dost thou not practise it? “Friend, how camest thou in hither, not having on a wedding-garment?” If it was not a wedding-feast, why didst thou come at the invitation? If it was, then why didst thou come without a wedding-garment?

I would but ask a hypocritical professor of the Gospel, what he will answer in that day? Verily you deprive yourselves of all possibility of apology in “the day of the righteous judgment of God.” It is said of the man that had no wedding-garment on, that when Christ came and examined him, he was speechless. He that is graceless in a day of grace, will be speechless in a day of judgment: professing Christ without a heart to close with Christ, will leave our souls inexcusable, and make our damnation unavoidable and more intolerable.

These are the motives to enforce the duty; and O that God would set them home upon your hearts and consciences, that you might not dare to rest a moment longer in a half-work, or in being Christians within a little, but that you might be altogether Christians!

Question. “But you will say possibly, how shall I do? What means shall I use, that I may attain to a thorough work in my heart; that I may be no longer almost, but altogether a Christian?”

Answer. Now I shall lay down three rules of direction instead of many, to further and help you in this important duty, and so leave this work to God’s blessing.

Direction 1. “Break off all false peace of conscience;” this is the devil’s bond to hold the soul from seeking after Christ. As there is the peace of God, so there is the peace of Satan; but they are easily known, for they are as contrary as heaven and hell, as light and darkness. The peace of God flows from a work of grace in the soul, and is the peace of a regenerate state; but the peace of Satan is the peace of an unregenerate state, it is the peace of death; in the grave Job saith there is peace—“There the wicked cease from troubling;” so a soul dead in sin is full of peace, the wicked one troubleth him not. The peace of God in the soul is a peace flowing from removal of guilt, by justifying grace—“Being justified by faith in his blood, we have peace with God;” but the peace of Satan in the soul arises and is maintained by a stupidity of spirit, and insensibility of guilt upon the conscience. The peace of God is a peace from sin, that fortifies the heart against it: “The peace of God that passeth all men’s understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.” The more of this peace there is in the soul, the more is the soul fortified against sin; but the peace of Satan is peace in sin: "The strong man armed keeps the house, and there is all at peace." The saint's peace is a peace with God, but not with sin; the sinner's peace is a peace with sin, but not with God: and this is a peace better broken than kept. It is a false, a dangerous, an undoing peace. My brethren, death and judgment will break all peace of conscience, but not that which is wrought by Christ in the soul, and is the fruit of the "blood of sprinkling:" "when he gives quietness, who can make trouble?" Now that peace that death will break, why should you keep? Who would be fond of that quietness which the flames of hell will burn in sunder? and yet how many travel to hell through the fool's paradise of a false peace! O break off this peace! for we can have no peace with God in Christ, whilst this peace remains in our hearts. The Lord Christ gives no peace to them that will not seek it; and that man will never seek it, that does not see his need of it; and he that is at peace in his lusts, sees no need of the peace of Christ. The sinner must be wounded for sin, and troubled under it, before Christ will heal his wounds, and give him peace from it.

Direction 2. Labour after a thorough work of conviction; every conviction will not do it. The almost Christian hath his convictions as well as the true Christian, or else he had never gone so far; but they are not sound and right convictions, or else he had gone farther: God will have the soul truly sensible of the bitterness of sin, before it shall taste the sweetness of mercy. The plough of conviction must go deep, and make deep furrows in the heart, before God will sow the precious seed of grace, and comfort there, that so it may have depth of earth to grow in. This is the constant method of God; first to show man his sin, then his Saviour; first his danger, then his Redeemer; first his wound, then his cure; first his own vileness, then Christ's righteousness. We must be brought to cry out, "Unclean, unclean!" to mourn for Him whom we have pierced, and then he sets open for us a fountain to wash in for sin, and for uncleanness. That is a notable place, Job xxxiii. 27, 28. "He looked upon men; and if any say, I have sinned, and perverted that which was right, and it profited me not; he will deliver his soul from going into the pit, and his life shall see the light." The sinner must see the unprofitableness of his unrighteousness, before he profit by Christ's righteousness. The Israelites are first stung with the fiery serpents, and then the brazen serpent is set up. Ephraim is first thoroughly convinced, and then God's bowels of mercy work toward him. Thus it was with Paul, Manasseh, the jailor, &c. So that this is the unchangeable method of God in working grace, to begin with conviction of sin. O therefore labour for thorough conviction; and there are three things we should especially be convinced of.

First, Be convinced of the evil of sin; the filthy and heinous nature of it. This is the greatest evil in the world; it wrongs God, it wounds Christ, it grieves the Holy Spirit, it ruineth a precious soul; all other evils are not to be named with this. My brethren, though to do sin is the worst work, yet to see sin is the best sight; for sin discovered in its vileness, makes Christ to be desired in his fulness. But above all, labour to be convinced of the mischief of an unsound heart; what an abhorrence it is to God, what certain ruin it brings upon the soul. O think often upon the hypocrite's hell. "For this people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing, and their eyes they have closed; lest at any time they should see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and should understand with their heart, and should be converted, and I should heal them."

Secondly, Be convinced of the misery and desperate danger of a natural condition; for till we see the plague of our hearts and the misery of our state by nature, we shall never be brought off ourselves to seek help in another.

Thirdly, Be convinced of the utter insufficiency and inability of any thing below Christ Jesus to minister relief to thy soul in this case. All things besides Jesus Christ are "physicians of no value;" duties, performances, prayers, tears, self-righteousness, avail nothing in this case; they make us like the troops of Tema, to return "ashamed at our disappointment" from such "failing brooks."

Alas! it is an infinite righteousness that must satisfy for us, for it is an infinite God that is offended by us. If ever thy sin be pardoned, it is infinite mercy that must pardon it; if ever thou be reconciled to God, it is infinite merit must do it: if ever thy heart be changed, and thy state renewed, it is infinite power must effect it; and if ever thy soul escape hell, and be saved at last, it is infinite grace must save it.

In these three things right and sound conviction lieth: and wherever the Spirit of God worketh these thorough convictions, it is in order to a true and sound conversion: for by this means the soul is brought under a right qualification for the receiving of Christ.

You must know, that a sinner can never come to Christ; for he is dead in sin, in enmity against Christ, an enemy to God, and the grace of God; but there are certain qualifications that come between the soul's dead state in sin, and the work of conversion and closing with Christ, whereby the soul is put into a capacity of receiving the Lord Jesus Christ; for no man is brought immediately out of his dead state, and made to believe in Jesus Christ; there are some qualifications coming in between. Now sound convictions are the right qualifications for the sinner's receiving Christ; "for he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance;" that is, such as see themselves sinners, and thereby in a lost condition. So Luke exemplifies it: "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." "He is anointed, and sent to bind up the broken-hearted," to comfort all that mourn.

O therefore, if you would be sound Christians, get sound convictions: ask those that are believers indeed, and they will tell you, had it not been for their convictions, they had never sought after Christ for sanctification and salvation; they will tell you, they had perished, if they had not perished; they had been in eternal bondage, but for their spiritual bondage; had they not been lost as to Christ.

Direction 3. Never rest in convictions till they end in conversion. This is that wherein most men miscarry, they rest in their convictions, and take them for conversion, as if sin seen were therefore forgiven, or as if a sight of the want of grace were the truth of the work of grace.

That is a notable place in Hosea xiii. 13. "Ephraim is an unwise son, for he should not stay long in the place of the breaking forth of children." The place of the breaking forth of children is the womb; as the child comes out of the womb, so is conversion born out of the womb of conviction. Now when the child sticks between the womb and the world, it is dangerous, it hazards the life both of mother and child; so when a sinner rests in conviction, and goes no farther, but sticks "in the place of the breaking forth of children;" this is very dangerous, and hazards the life of the soul.

You that are at any time under convictions, O take heed of resting in them, do not stay long in the place of the breaking forth of children: though it is true, that conviction is the first step to conversion, yet it is not conversion; a man may carry his convictions along with him into hell.

What is that which troubleth poor creatures, when they come to die, but this—I have not improved my convictions; at such a time I was convinced of sin, but yet I went on in sin in the face of my convictions; in such a sermon I was convinced of such a duty, but I slighted the conviction; I was convinced of my want of Christ, and of the readiness of Christ to pardon and save; but alas! I followed not the conviction.

My brethren, remember this; slighted convictions are the worst death-bed companions. There are two things especially, which above all others, make a death-bed very uncomfortable:

1. Purposes and promises not performed.
2. Convictions slighted and not improved.

When a man takes up purposes to close with Christ, and yet puts them not into execution; and when he is convinced of sin and duty, and yet improves not his convictions,—O this will sting and wound at last!

Now therefore, hath the Spirit of the Lord been at work in your souls? Have you ever been convinced of the evil of sin, of the misery of a natural state, of the insufficiency of all things under heaven to help, of the fulness and righteousness of Jesus Christ, of the necessity of resting upon him for pardon and peace, for sanctification and salvation? Have you ever been really convinced of these things? O then, as you love your own souls, as ever you hope to be saved at last, and enjoy God for ever, improve these convictions, and be sure you rest not in them till they rise up to a thorough close with the Lord Jesus Christ, and so end in a sound and perfect conversion ! Thus shall you be not only almost, but altogether a Christian.

FINIS.

Princeton Theological Seminary Libraries

1 1012 01197 4427

